ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

First and foremost, I take the opportunity of acknowledging my great indebtedness to my supervisor Professor Shanta Mahalanobis, Department of English, University of Calcutta, for her generous help, advice, and encouragement to me in preparing and submitting my dissertation on time. Her keen acumen, penetrating insight, and valuable suggestions have enabled me to explore, to some extent, the enigma of the art and artefacts of such a modernist writer as Joseph Conrad. And, I am grateful for her minute, rigorous, and painstaking supervision, which has been virtually instrumental in leading me to structure my thesis in the present shape.

I am also deeply grateful to the late Professor P.C. Ghosh, and the late Professor S.K. Das, both of whom were respected for their scholarship in the Department of English, University of Calcutta,--for their valuable suggestions and encouragement to me at different stages of the writing of my dissertation.

I remain obliged and thankful to the staff and members of the Department of English, University of Calcutta, for their all-round assistance and cooperation.

I am equally thankful to the librarians of the Reading and Lending Sections of the National Library, Kolkata, who have helped me in finding various books on Conrad and journals containing articles and essays on Conrad. My gratitude to them is boundless.

I have also considerably benefitted from the library of the British Council Division, Kolkata. I have utilized the books, journals, and periodicals in circulation here for obtaining information and critical commentaries on Conrad. Various seminars on modern fiction organised by the British Council sharpened my understanding and appreciation of Conrad. For this, I shall remain ever grateful to the librarian of the British Council, Kolkata, and its associated staff.

For the same reason, I am indebted to the librarian and members of the United States Information Service, American Centre, Kolkata, where I used the journals dealing with modern fiction.

I also convey my sincere gratitude to the librarian and staff-members of the Central Library of the University of Calcutta for their help and co-operation in conducting my research programme in its inner sanctum.

Computer typing of the thesis has been evenly shared by my friend Sri Prabir Kumar Dash, and by Ms Ruby Das with punctilious attention to detail. To them I extend my heartfelt thanks.
