Preface

I would like to express my profound gratitude to Dr. Malayendu Saha, formerly Head of the Department of Commerce and currently Professor of Commerce, University of Calcutta, who so ably guided my research work on Regional Rural Banks (RRBs) in an age of ostentation, hype and self-promotion. His simplicity, self-effacing humility and genuine affection for his students in the best guru-shishya tradition, have been an inspiration. Without his vast fund of knowledge, ready-witted advice, and constant paternal encouragement, this research work would have been impossible. For his help in these and so many other ways, I am eternally indebted.

I am also extremely grateful to all the teachers of the Department of Commerce, University of Calcutta, for their valuable opinions and suggestions in connection with this study. I am also indebted to the learned authors of India and abroad for the help that I took from their works.

I also acknowledge my gratitude to the librarian and the staff of the Central Library of the University of Calcutta, library of the Indian Institute of Management (Calcutta) and National Library (Kolkata), library of the Reserve Bank of India (Kolkata) for allowing me to use their books, periodicals, journals and other documents necessary for my work.

Sri Asesh Banerjee (Manager, NABARD-Kolkata) and Sri Bidyut Das (General Manager, WBSCB) rendered invaluable assistance during my research work, giving up their spare time on my behalf. Earlier Smt B.K. Lama (Manager, NABARD-Kolkata), Dr. V. Pukazhendhi (General Manager, NABARD- Mumbai) and Sri Rabindranath Mitra (General Manager-Operation, WBSCB) provided crucial support. To all of them, I convey my heartfelt thanks.

My father Sri Kalol Kumar Chakraborty, my mother (late) Smt Ira Rani Chakraborty, my brother Sri Tapas Chakraborty, my wife Smt Anindita Chakraborty (Bagchi) and my daughter 'Titir' were the tower of strength and bedrock of encouragement throughout my doctoral research in Kolkata.
