ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

I am immensely indebted to Nripen Banerjee, Centre for Studies in Social Sciences, Calcutta (since retired) who primarily initiated me into the study of informal sector. Due to the diverse nature of this broad spectrum of occupation, I concentrated my investigation to the most dynamic segment of this sector, Small Manufacturing Enterprise (SME) clusters. This was not an easy task for me as secondary sources of information was little and not much work has been done earlier in analysing industrial clusters in West Bengal.

Starting from identifying the problems, choosing areas of primary data and that to the preparation of the questionnaire of the field surveys, the whole process of specifying the relevant questions to inquire about was keenly guided by my supervisor, Debdas Banerjee. His invaluable guidance in looking into the different facets of the debate regarding inclusive development provoked me to go deeper into the issues. In repeated discussions and corrections, he critically scrutinised every step in my analysis and helped me to identify the lacunae that remained. I express my profound sense of gratitude to my supervisor for the guidance that I received to complete the dissertation and believe that the outcome still not fully reflect the amount of attention that he paid.

I am indebted to Ishita Mukherjee, my associate supervisor, who in several occasions gave valuable suggestions and guidance that helped me a lot to complete the thesis. She provided valuable insights in analysing and processing survey results and categorising information in a proper manner. I humbly acknowledge my deep gratitude to her.

I am immensely indebted to late Robin Mukherjee, Indian Statistical Institute and Pabitra Giri, University of Calcutta for their valuable comments and suggestions while responding to a portion of my work. I am grateful to Amiya Kumar Bagchi, Director, Institute of Development Studies Kolkata, and V.K. Ramchandran, Indian Statistical Institute, for their introspective comments, suggestions and discussions on my paper related to the thesis. These invaluable opportunities of interactions helped me for a better understanding of the issues. Finally, I humbly acknowledge my deep gratitude to Ajit Choudhury and Sarmila Banerjee of University of Calcutta for their valuable interventions and suggestions during the formal presentation of the thesis in the seminar at the Department of Economics, Calcutta University. All these helped me to revise and improve upon the draft of the thesis. However, none of them is responsible for the remaining errors, if any.

Apart from these eminent teachers and academicians, I am also grateful to Shri Hironmoy Nath, Officer, DIC, South 24-Parganas, Kaushik Majumdar, Inspector of Industries in Fultala, Baruipur and B. Mukherjee, Senior Law Officer, WBPCB for the favour that I received from their office during my field survey. I would like to place on record my sense of gratitude to social activists, Ratan Majumdar, Md. Jasimuddin, Tannu Mirza, Rahul Ghosh, Manab Naiya, Abdul Rauf as well as activists of the Centre for Indian Trade Unions in Howrah. Without their help I could not get contacts of key informants in my field survey. I am also indebted to the librarians of Centre for Studies in Social Sciences, Calcutta, Institute of Indian Foundrymen and the National Library for giving me easy access to journals and books.

I am grateful to the Deputy Secretary, Department of Finance (Taxation) and the Commissioner, Directorate of Commercial Taxes, Government of West Bengal for allowing me to pursue the Ph.D programme while in service.
