Acknowledgement

I wish to record my gratitude and appreciation for several people, who have variously contributed to this research.

Professor Amit Shovon Ray, my supervisor, has been the moving spirit behind this thesis. Professor Ray went far beyond his mandated responsibilities of supervision and assumed the larger role of a teacher in guiding me through the thesis. He has exposed me to new frontiers of knowledge and learning. Without his untiring efforts, patience, and persuasion, this thesis would not have seen the light of the day. I cherish my association with Professor Ray. I'm grateful to him for enabling me to begin my journey in the fascinating world of academic research.

I thank my parents, Kalyani and Dibyendu Palit, for supporting me in all my endeavours. My parents have always put the highest premium on education and learning. I can only thank them for their ceaseless efforts in ensuring that I keep up my academic pursuits. I hope this thesis marks the beginning of the scholastic predilection, which they always wanted me to acquire.

My in-laws, Sanghamitra and Dr Pradip Chandra Sinha, and my brother-in-law Parijat, have always been keen to see me do well. I thank them for their continuous encouragement and the various help that they have extended during the course of my research.

Submission of this thesis will make my jethu, Suvendu Palit, one of the happiest persons. Jethu, Boroma, and Didi's affection, have always overwhelmed me. My sejokaka, Dr. Amalendu Palit, has been equally encouraging in my research, along with kakima, Tumpa and Dipankar. My aunt, Kavita Basu (Atupishi), has always taken keen interest in my academic pursuits. I also thank my cousin, Debarati (Bubun), and my nephew, Gattu, for being around.

I am grateful to the faculty of International Trade and Development (ITD), School of International Studies (SIS), Jawaharlal Nehru University (JNU), and particularly to Professor Ashok Guha, Professor S.K.Das, and Professor Alokesh Barua, for helping me at different points of time.

I thank my colleagues in the Department of Economic Affairs, Ministry of Finance, who have been immensely helpful and accommodating during my research. I specially thank Dr Ashok K. Lahiri, Chief Economic Adviser, for not only encouraging me throughout, but also for being a tremendous source of support during my difficult times. My senior colleague, Mr. Yogesh Chandra, Adviser, has been most tolerant and patronising, and has always excused my absence from work with an affectionate smile. I have also benefited significantly from discussions with my other senior colleagues, Dr Tarun Das and Dr Ajay Shah. I specially thank the staff of the Department of Economic Affairs Library in the Ministry of Finance for their valuable support. I also thank the SIA, Department of Industrial Promotion and Policy, Ministry of Commerce and Industry for providing publications and necessary documents.

I developed interest in my subject of research at a time, when I was working on the area with Dr Manas Bhattacharya. Manas-da is more a friend than a colleague. He has provided intellectual inputs at various points of my research and has followed up my progress with unfailing regularity. Manas-da and Shampa-boudi have been inseparable parts of my life in Delhi. I can only thank them for their love and affection.
Partha Pratim Mitra, or Partha-da, another dear colleague and friend, has been an unending source of inspiration, support and encouragement. So has been Anand Singh Bhal, whose witty remarks and bright sense of humour have never failed to enliven me.
I also thank my colleague K.L.Prasad for giving me the much-needed company during the lonely weekends I spent working in office.
I have received enormous moral support and encouragement from my friends during this research. Saradindu has always been around to address queries and run errands, however trivial and irritating, at the expense of personal commitments. Avik, who has been my friend through thick and thin, has never failed to be at my side when required. Rajesh, Subhomoy, Anindya, and Arya, have not only helped me during difficult times, but have also taken active interest in my research. Manisha and Kuntal have been most supportive. I also fondly remember the active help extended by Sourav and Pari during the early days of my research.
I thank Mr Durg Singh for helping me in all respects.
I enrolled for Ph.D. ten months after my marriage. I would probably, have not done so, had my wife, Parama, not motivated me. I find it difficult to locate words for expressing the role Parama plays in my life. Apart from being my largest source of inspiration and encouragement, she has tried to help me in all possible ways, by overcoming deep personal grief. She has withstood my long hours of absence and lack of attention to her with characteristic patience and cheerful disposition. I do not wish to belittle her by thanking. I dedicate my research to Parama.
All errors and omissions in this thesis are entirely mine.
