planning in a democratic set-up. It is in a democratic country that planning presents peculiar problems of adjustment and co-ordination.
I have sought to visualize and clarify these problems and also to explore the means of solving them both in advanced and under-developed count-tries. (5) A critical survey of different aspects of the planning problem has convinced me that a mere national approach to planning such as has been made up till now does not lead to fruitful and satisfactory results. National planning needs to be supplemented by international planning. I have endeavoured to investigate into the problems and possibilities of international planning.
