Bibliography:

A. Sanskrit texts: (i) Vedas; (ii) Brāhmaṇas; (iii) Upaniṣats; (iv) Sūtras; (v) Other Vedic texts; (vi) Grammatical texts; (vii) Lexicons; (viii) Epics; (ix) Purāṇas; (x) Tantras; (xi) Kāvyā literature; (xii) Astronomy; (xiii) Arthaśāstra; (xiv) Smṛiti; (xv) Texts on gotra and pravara; (xvi) Buddhist texts; (xvii) Texts dealing with regional affairs; (xviii) Kāmasāstra.

B. Pāli texts. C. Āvestan texts used for word-references.

D. Books in Bengali. E. Books for word-references.

F. Translations.

G. Modern works: (i) Indian history; (ii) Indian sociology and law; (iii) Indian polity and social organisation; (iv) Other works; (v) Works used for sociological references.

H. Articles used for references.

Abbreviations

Introduction

Chapter I - Gotra and pravara in the Vedic age:

Section I - Relation of gotra to the pastoral life of early Aryans.

Section II - Gotra indicative of clan.

Section III - Gotra appellations in Vedic literature.

Section IV - The pravara rite and the belief in ancestral Fires.
Section V - Gotra linked up with the tradition relating to seven Riṣis.

Section VI - The Pitaras or clan - patriarchs.

Section VII - The Rigvedic Riṣi clans of eminence forming the basis of the Brāhmaṇical conception of gotra.

Section VIII - The Āprisūktas and their bearing upon the gotra system.

Chapter II - Vedic patriarchy:

Section I - Patriarchy of Rigvedic society.

Section II - The hypothesis of Aryan matriarchy.

Section III - Recent viewpoints in defence of Aryan matriarchy.

Section IV - Male progeny preferred in the Vedic household.

Section V - Male lineage.

Section VI - Sagotra and sapinda.

Section VII - Inheritance in the male line.

Appendix - Vedic patronymics.

Chapter III - Vedic clan life:

Section I - Gaṇa and gotra.

Section II - Gaṇa, gotra and vis'.

Section III - Jana and gotra.

Section IV - Interpretation of the words 'gaṇa', 'gotra', 'jana' and 'vis'.

Section V - Are vis' and jana territorial units?

Section VI - The five janas.

Section VII - Vis' and gaṇa.

Section VIII - Viṣpāti, gaṇapati and jyeṣṭha.
Section IX - Gaṇapati and grāmaṇī.

Section X - Gaṇa, vrata and sārdha.

Section XI - Is the Vedic gaṇa precursor of the republican tribal gaṇas of later ages?

Section XII - Does the Vedic gaṇa signify a guild?

Section XIII - The tribal background of Vedic society.

Section XIV - Origin of classes in the tribal set up.

Section XV - Brahma, Kṣatra and Vaiś(Vaisya).

Chapter IV - Interpretation of gotra in the post-Vedic ages and Brāhmaṇisation of the gotra system:

Section I - Gotra as a term for the Vedic clan.

Section II - The progressive contraction of gotra.

Section III - The gotra system as represented in the Sūtras.

Section IV - The lexicographic point of view.

Section V - The Brähmaṇical interpretation of gotra.

Section VI - Gotrāpatya and anantarāpatya.

Section VII - Gotra signifying the founder-patriarch as well as the line of descendants.

Section VIII - Gotra signifying the principal clan as well as the derivative septs.

Section IX - Gotra and gotrāvayava.

Section X - Sāstriya gotra and laukikagotra.

Section XI - The tradition of Brähmaṇical origin of gotra.

Section XII - Gotra and varṇa.

Section XIII - The gotra of Kṣatriyas.

Section XIV - The gotra of Vaiśyas.

Section XV - The superimposition of Brähmaṇa gotras upon non-Brähmaṇa castes.
Section XVI - The theory of Kṣatriyan origin of gotras reviewed.

Section XVII - The earlier phase of the caste system as developing within the gotra.

Section XVIII - Kṣatriya-Brāhmaṇa gotras.

Section XIX - Names of Kṣatriyas in the list of pravaras.

Chapter V - Kṣatriya gotra tradition: 210 - 213

Section I - Kṣatriya clans treated as gotras.

Section II - Continuity of the Kṣatriya gotra tradition.

Chapter VI - Patriarchal basis of metronymics of the epic tradition: 214 - 217

Section I - Metronymics in the royal families of the epics.

Section II - The method of identification by a metronymic.

Chapter VII - Dissolution of the Aryan gotra: 218 - 257

Section I - Disintegration of the Aryan clan as conditioned by the social complications of the Vedic age.

Section II - Double gotra affiliation or entry into a non-kin gotra.

Section III - Social reluctance to approve dvigotra-hood as a regular feature of clan life: (A) Gotra of kṣetraja sons; (B) The institution of niyoga; (C) Paternity and gotra of kānina sons and putrikā-putras; (D) Paternity and gotra of adopted sons; (E) Gotra of para-jāta sons.

Section IV - Instances of dvigotra families.

Section V - Adoption of strangers in a gotra.
Section VI - Inclusion of non-Aryan clans in the Aryan gotra fold.
Section VII - Probable ways of Aryanisation and its consequences.

Chapter VIII - Gotra as a conventional mark of Aryan tradition:
Section I - Tribal gotras.
Section II - Gotras adopted by Vrātya (?) tribes.
Section III - Gotra appellations more valued than personal names.
Section IV - Gotra appellations as names of authors of canonical and other kinds of works.
Section V - Gotras of royal dynasties.
Section VI - Metronymics in royal families and their significance.
Section VII - Belief in gotra kinship as revealed in the identification of gotra with kula in the copper plate grants.
Section VIII - General review.

Chapter IX - Gotra conceptions as moulded by popular beliefs:
Section I - Gotradevis conceived as ruling deities of families.
Section II - Gotradevī and Gaṇāmṛtā.
Section III - The bearing of gaṇa-gotra tradition upon the cult of Gaṇesā.
Section IV - Gotras of popular origin.
Section V - Gotra and totemism.
Section VI - Totemic gotras in the list of Baudhāyana(?).

Section VII - Popular interpretation of gotra and pravara.

Chapter X - Gotra and pravara. 290 - 292

Chapter XI - Gotra and exogamy. 293 - 295

Chapter XII - Gotras of Śūdras. 296 - 300

Chapter XIII - Conclusion. 301 - 302