CONTENTS

CHAPTER-I: 1-35
Introduction - Concept of minimum needs - Economic growth was the main objective during the first four Five-Year Plans - Distributive effect of benefits of the Plan programmes was not automatic - Hence necessity for a Programme to ensure a minimum standard of social consumption and investment - Origin and evolution of the concept of minimum needs in the Plans - Outlay on the Minimum Needs Programme in the Fifth Five-Year Plan - Implications of the Programme - Departure in Strategy in the Fifth Plan from the earlier Plans.

CHAPTER-II: 36-57
Expenditure position in West Bengal during the earlier Plans - Position of weaker sections after these Plans - Basis of allocation of outlay under Minimum Needs Programme in the Fifth Plan - Changes in outlay - Actual expenditure - Targets fixed and achieved during the period.

CHAPTER-III: 58-73
CHAPTEIV:

Targets and achievements under the Programme in the States of Andhra Pradesh, Karnataka, Uttar Pradesh, Rajasthan and Gujarat during the Fifth Five-Year Plan - Their proposals for the Five-Year Plan, 1978-83.

CHAPTER-V:

Appraisal - Shortfall in expenditure on the Programme in the country and in West Bengal during the Fifth Plan - Targets in financial and physical terms not reached - No monitoring or evaluation of the Programme - No identification of weaker sections - Programme not pursued consistently - Are all items of the Programme actually related to minimum needs of the people? - Why partial success for the Programme?

CHAPTER-VI:

Scope for changes in the pattern of the Programme both in its contents and in the manner of implementation - Necessity for proper identification of beneficiaries at the micro-level and an organised distribution system - Extent of people's participation - Part played by District Planning Committees in West Bengal in the past - Possible role of Panchayat bodies - Feasibility of treating the Programme outside the State Plan - Necessity for a suitable monitoring organisation.