Acknowledgements

Like any other student of social sciences, for me also JNU holds a special place. Even after spending around eight years, the aura associated with Social Sciences in JNU has never decreased. Rather with each passing year it has increased leaps and bounds. This has more to do with the practice of pure academic exercise than with the mere physical structure. At this moment when I am submitting my PhD these, the sense of loss that I will not be associated is overwhelming.

This thesis which is complete now, would not have been possible without the support and valuable inputs from several people. The foremost among them is my supervisor Prof. Bipan Chandra Gupta. His guidance and inputs while carrying out this research has always been valuable and of great importance. After years of interaction, both academic and non-academic, I can say with all certainty that Sir you are the best supervisor in every sense of the term, particularly with regard to the space and encouragement you gave me to think independently and logically. Thanks a lot Sir!

Well, can one ever thank his friends and well wishers. Even when one tries to thank them, the word seems inadequate. Among my friends the list is endless; however I would specifically like to thank Manoj, Bhushan and Ashwini for helping in formulating Chapter-IV. I would also like to thank Narendra, Goetesh, Dilip da, Negi and Akhilesh for their constant encouragement. I am indebted to Hari, Manoj, and Bhushan for going through my manuscripts time and again and proof reading the whole thesis.

I would also like to thank Urvashi, Unde, Auntyji, Suruchi ma'am for selfless support and encouragement at times when I was demotivated. I would also like to thank my SCWST colleagues for their constant concern about the status of my thesis.

This research would not have been possible, had not the people of villages Samdaha and Mani Kalan extended their support and co-operation in not only agreeing for long interview sessions but also for keeping me in good spirit. I would specifically like to thank Dr. Shitara, Jogji, Mr. Kalwa of Mani Kalan and Mr. Krishnadev
To Mr. Satyadev Tiwari and his whole family for keeping me in their house and providing me the wonderful food and accommodation.

I also received a great amount of support from several institutions. Among them the staff of Centre for Study of Social Systems, INL Library and Teen Murti Library deserve special thanks.

It goes without saying that I am humbly thankful to my family for their continuous support and encouragement.

I am solely responsible for errors, if any.

Pramod Kumar Singh