

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

It is my pleasure to recall the valuable contributions of all those who helped me in some way or other to make this study a success. I must begin with reference to my supervisor Dr. Sukumar Nandi as he was without any equal in respect of providing me unstinted support towards successful completion of my Ph.D. Programme. Backed with scholastic guiding ability, he made, rather successfully, sincere and untiring effort to upgrade the quality of my study. Moreover, through quick disposal of referred cases, he lent a speed to the pace of my work and thus made possible for me to finish it with relative rapidity. For all these, I am over-burdened with a feeling of gratitude and regard towards him.

In Calcutta, another reverend personality who is afresh in my memory is Professor Rakhal Datta. But for his initiative and assistance, as I feel, I would never have got admitted into Ph.D Programme. In his capacity as the former Head of the Economics Department and Convenor of Ph.D. Committee of the same Department, he extended me all necessary cooperation with uncommon zeal and liberalism. So I convey my heart-felt gratitude to him. Many other Faculties of the Department and some employees of the Calcutta University were helpful to me in various ways and therefore they deserve my appreciation. To the Government of India, I am thankful for awarding me their scholarship.

In Dhaka, Syed Marghub Morshed, the former Director General of my office National Institute of Local Government played an active part in procuring me the scholarship and he also extended me necessary logistic support for joining the Ph.D. Programme. This makes me ever-grateful to him. In Dr. Kamal Siddiqui, the subsequent Director General of the Institute, I found the the most powerful source of inspiration behind my going for a Ph.D. Programme. Not only he was the first to bring into my head the idea of doing a Ph.D. but he also all along exhorted me to go well through it. The logistics he provided me as Director General was certainly invaluable. I, therefore, preserve a special word of thanks for him.

Among my other colleagues, Mr. Q.M.A.H. Saqui left some suggestions for improving my study, Mr. Jamshed Ahmed helped me through his typing pool and Mr. Azaharul Islam through his statistical skill and yet many others, as I feel sure, wished me well in my academic endeavour. I am, therefore, grateful to them all. Last but not the least, the real cost of forbearing my absence during my stay in Calcutta, was absolutely borne by my family members particularly my wife and two sons. The former also rendered useful services related to processing of data. I think the pains taken by them will be duly compensated by the pleasure of seeing this study come out.

Despite the acknowledgements outlined above, any errors if still be surviving in the study are imputable to my personal accountability.

1st June, 1990.

Kh. Azad Ahmed.
