

Professor S. Gopal I am indebted to for generously allowing me to attend lectures on British policy in India at the Jawaharlal Nehru University, New Delhi. Professor Aparna Basu must feel considerably relieved at my completing my project for I have mercilessly pestered her for information and she has been invariably forthcoming. Professor Parthasarathi Gupta for all his advice, particularly with the bibliography, and for kindly putting me in touch with his valuable contacts in England. Professor Ravinder Kumar I thank for enlightened and friendly help.

To psychiatrist Dr. Ashit Sheth of Bombay I owe a particular debt of gratitude and affection for taking off his valuable time to help me psychoanalyse a man dead more than half a century ago. My father-in-law, Mr. Dwarkadas Goradia I thank for kindly correcting the proofs, my mother Mrs. Savitri Daftary for her unswerving faith in my ability to complete the project and my friends and family for patiently allowing themselves to be used as sounding boards. Mr. S. Ghose-Chowdhury merits special mention.

The Librarians of the National Library, the libraries at the Bengal Club and Calcutta Club in Calcutta, the British Council Library, both in Calcutta and Delhi, the library at the Centre for Studies in Social Sciences, Calcutta, the India International Centre Library in Delhi, the British Museum, and the Eastbourne Central Library, U.K. I owe thanks for their boundless help. Mr. R.N. Kapur for typing out the manuscript.

Dr. Richard Bingle of the India Office Library and Records for his invaluable suggestions and occasional help in deciphering Curzon's hieroglyphics. Mr. D.M. Blake, also of the India Office Library, for help in tracking down source material and
