ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

Serious research in any branch of science is a joint effort of many people. This is more true in the branch of psychology where the subjects of research are most often human persons and their behaviour. To make any definitive judgement on human behaviour, one needs the cooperation and willingness of a sizeable number of people. The present study at hand which deals with retirement behaviour from a psycho-social angle is no exception to this.

Therefore, deep and heartfelt gratitude of the investigator goes out to those 545 retired people from Bombay, Nagpur, Aurangabad and Poona regions who joyfully and patiently gave their valuable time and experience to make this study a reality. However, to organise, plan, and execute any research design and to draw valid and meaningful conclusions from the large stock of obtained data need diligent and continuous guidance, and moral support from an experienced person. This was easily made available by Dr. C.G. Deshpande, who was a constant companion from the start to finish, for which the investigator is immensely grateful.
The investigator is also greatly indebted to the head and the staff of the Department of Psychology, University of Poona and of various libraries for their generous help and assistance in different ways. Thanks are also due to all of my personal friends who have at every stage of research extended a helping hand commensurate with their talents and trainings. Finally let me express my gratitude to the University of Poona for granting me a research stipend for a period of three years.
