by Moscow as an agent of the West in the region. One finds it difficult to see ways and means by which Kabul might find a way out of this dilemma although the disintegration of the Soviet Union has made a critical difference to the future of Afghanistan.

But even then no great powers, regional or international, now seem to be interested in resolution of Afghan problems and the whole country is receiving a benign neglect at the moment from the West. For to make Afghanistan a united nation is really to revive ethnic and territorial disputes with neighbouring countries such as Pakistan and Iran.
