This dissertation is a result of my keen interest in an exceptional woman of the nineteenth century, Krishnabhabini Das, whose path-breaking endeavour of publishing her travelogue opened new horizons in the fields of nineteenth century studies, postcolonial literature, women's studies and much more. But as I proceeded with my research I realised that this thesis could not have been completed without the unfailing support of many individuals and I owe my sincerest gratitude towards all of them. I am deeply grateful and indebted to Prof. Jharna Sanyal, my supervisor, who has always been an extraordinary source of guidance, encouragement and support. Her patience and faith in this research project have helped me take it towards completion. Her detailed appraisal of my work at every stage and valuable inputs have not only improved the quality of this work but has also made me more mature as a researcher. Whenever I faltered, she was always there with her able guidance. It is her persistent encouragement and trust that has kept bringing me back to my research even when I got caught up in other responsibilities, both professional and personal. It is impossible to express in words how much I owe to her.

I express my gratitude to all the teachers of the Department of English, University of Calcutta for their insightful suggestions during my pre-submission seminar presentation and also for their support and encouragement. Their suggestions have been invaluable in improving the quality of my work.

I am also extremely indebted to my colleagues at Sarsuna College, especially Ms. Sarottama Majumdar for easing my college work load to enable me to complete this dissertation.

Her encouragement and support has helped me maintain a balance between my job and my research. I am thankful to my college teacher-in charge, Sri Arun Kumar Dawn and our ex-principal, Late Dr. Pranab Kumar Ray for granting me leaves from the college, whenever required, to complete this dissertation.

The entire staff of the National Library and particularly Sri Asim Mukhopadhyay deserves special thanks for aiding me with my research process. I am also grateful to the staff of the Central Library of the University of Calcutta, Bangiya Sahitya Parishad Library, Chaitanya Library, The Asiatic Society Library, and the Ramkrishna Mission Institute of Culture Library for their kind cooperation during this entire period.

Special thanks to Smt. Punyarupa Das and Smt. Namita Dutta who are the members of the Das family to which Krishnabhabini belonged. I am sincerely grateful to Smt. Namita Dutta for sharing with me the important details of Krishnabhabini's life and her family which helped me to situate the author and her work better.

I am thankful to all my friends for their constant support and encouragement. Suranjana Choudhury deserves a special mention for always being there with her help and advice throughout this period. I am also thankful to Lopamudra Banerjee and Sudeshna Chakravorty for being a source of constant encouragement.

Lastly and most importantly I am grateful to my family for being there and encouraging me throughout. My parents Smt. Manjusree Sengupta and Sri Kajal Kanti Sengupta with their constant reminders and gentle chidings have kept me moving whenever I have failed to meet deadlines. Subhjit Sengupta, my brother with his characteristic patience has often heard me out as I tried to sift my ideas and also added helpful inputs. He has been one of my greatest sources of encouragement always. Special thanks to my mother-in-law Smt. Chhanda Dasgupta without whose active support I could not have completed this dissertation. She has always been there ready with her support and even helped me by taking care of my son whenever required. I must thank my husband, Anirban Dasgupta for the patience, support and understanding that he displayed during this entire journey. The unfailing faith of my family in my work has been my greatest pillar of support and I am extremely grateful to all of them.
