I owe a deep debt of gratitude to my supervisor Dr. Aijazuddin Ahmed, Professor of Geography, CSRD, SSS, Jawaharlal Nehru University for successfully supervising the preparation of the thesis with great care and patience. Had it not been for his affection and continuous encouragement, the thesis perhaps would not have seen the light of the day.

The Centre for the Study of Regional Development, where I completed long years of study, provided in a variety of ways and means, the necessary research facilities and adequate infrastructure which went a long way in making it possible for me to undertake critical research. I am extremely grateful to all the members of the faculty, technical and non-technical staff and my fellow students, who have helped me in their own ways - difficult to enumerate individually.

I recall with great pleasure the assistance received from my dearest friend Niladri, who never allowed me to look to the sky till I completed the writing of the thesis.

I extend my heartfelt thanks to Prof. R.D. Dikshit, Head, Department of Geography, M.D. University, Rohtak, for having given valuable suggestions after going through the sections of the manuscript.

The credit for a neat and flawless typing goes to Mr. Om Prakash who has taken pains to type out the dissertation with great care and accuracy.

The Electra Photostat deserves thanks for their assistance in competent reprographic work.

Finally, I fail to find words to thanks my dear wife Unita and little Varuni for their patience and understanding during the long, painstaking days of my research.
