First and foremost I would like to express my deep sense of gratitude to Dr. (Mrs.) Karuna Ahmad for her patient and untiring help and guidance throughout the preparation of my thesis. She has been a sense of great encouragement and inspiration to me.

I must also thank Professor Tapas Majumdar, Chairman of the Zakir Husain Centre for Educational Studies, whose profound knowledge and example have stimulated my commitment to research.

I am indebted to the Zakir Husain Centre for Educational Studies, for awarding me the fellowship for conducting this study.

I wish to thank Professor Satish Jaberwal of the Centre for Historical Studies for his comments on parts of my work and to Dr. Victor Jesudesan of the Indian Social Institute, New Delhi, for the statistical analysis of my data.

The Council for Social Development has extended me computer facilities and I must thank Mr. Venkataramani. The computer programming has been done entirely by him.

I cannot fail to mention the numerous kind and friendly people who are the subject matter of my study. Their co-operation, and ready and willing response have made this work possible. I am indeed thankful to them.
