As in any work of this nature, the writer accumulates many debts, both intellectual and of other types. At the outset I would like to acknowledge the inestimable assistance rendered to me by the library staffs in the following institutions: The Jawaharlal Nehru University and Indian Council of World Affairs in Delhi; the American Studies Research Centre, Hyderabad; the New York Public Library (Schomburg Branch); the National Archives, Library of Congress and Howard University all in Washington, D.C.; Harvard University (Houghton and Widener Libraries) at Cambridge, Mass.; and the Boston Public Library.

I am grateful to Dr and Mrs Badola, Mrs George I. Sargent and above all Dr. and Mrs C. F. Pant for help rendered to me during the period of my field work. In the U.S., I had the benefit of obtaining guidance from various American scholars, I am especially grateful to Ira Berlin, Herbert Gutman, Eric Rorer, Nathan I. Huggins and Elliot Brownlee. I am also deeply indebted to a fellow researcher, Joseph Neidy for help rendered both in the U.S. and after my return from there.

The staff of the Jawaharlal Nehru University, especially at the School of International Studies, has always been helpful and cooperative, needless to say I am deeply grateful to them. My colleagues and other faculty members at the Center for American and West European Studies as well as other students of the University have contributed to the intellectual output of this work in too many ways to acknowledge separately.

My interest in this theme arose in the course of work for the M.Phil. degree in American Studies under the guidance of Professor M. S. Venkataramani. After a series of discussions with him, I began work on this doctoral thesis. I am naturally grateful to him for providing supervision and guidance. His critical comments and thoughtful expositions offered over the years with seemingly limitless patience, sharpened my thinking and writing. Such flaws as remain, needless to say, are mine. I was also able to benefit from his presence in the U.S. during the period of my field-work. I must express my deepest gratitude to Dr. K. P. Kaushik who supervised my work while Professor Venkataramani was away from Delhi. Professor B. K. Shrivastava has all along been a source of encouragement and guidance.

My deepest thanks go to many friends both in the University as well as outside who by providing comradeship and companionship helped in the completion of this work. I hope this work will come up to their expectations. Here I must express special gratitude to Mrs. Kamini Tankha who helped in typing the earlier drafts of this thesis in spite of personal preoccupations. The final draft was typed by a friend who wishes to remain anonymous. He has not only typed this work but has been a stern and helpful critic as well.

The assistance of Mandira Mitra, who read and corrected the drafts was invaluable in more ways than one, and cannot be expressed in words. Lastly, I would like to express my deepest gratitude to members of my family, especially my parents, who have helped in numerous ways to sustain me in my effort to bring the work to its conclusion.
This work was done during the tenure of a Junior Research Fellowship of the Jawaharlal Nehru University. Financial assistance was also provided for varying periods of time by the American Studies Research Centre, Hyderabad, and the Indian Council for Historical Research, Delhi.
