Acknowledgment

In accomplishing the laborious task that I set out to do, there are many who deserve more than an acknowledgment of gratitude.

I am deeply indebted to my Supervisor Prof. Rajeev Bhargava, who not only provided me the most valuable guidance but also like a friend encouraged me to fulfill the task. I would also like to thank the faculty of the Center for Political Studies, particularly Prof. C. P. Bhambhari, Prof Gurpreet Mahajan, Prof. Balveer Arora and the chair person Prof. Sudha Pai, who were always available whenever I needed Help. I owe special thanks to Peter Van Wanterghem for his essential remarks and help during different stages of the thesis. I would like also thank Devika Sethi for her crucial help.

My thanks to Prof. G. Pant, Dr. M. Pedram, Prof. H. Bashirieah, Prof. F. Farhi, Dr. A. Mohammadi, Dr. N. Hashemirad for the discussions and their remarkable views on the thesis. My thanks also goes to the staff of CPS, particularly Mr. K.L. Arora in the office of CPS and Mr. Jamal Ahmad (Tech. Officer) and to Mr Satish Kumar (Sec. Officer) in the office of the school.

The financial assistance that has been granted to me by University Grants Commission of India provided me an essential help to fulfill the task of the study, for this help and many other crucial help for ever I am indebted to India. A scholar never works in isolation and for providing me with the environment where I could do my work, I am indebted to Jawaharlal Nehru University. I am thanking Le Le Thuy for her support and help. I gratefully thank my parents and my family who have stood by me through all these years and have suffered my absence from home for long periods and by their financial support, provided me a proper condition for doing my study.

I would like, in the end, to dedicate this thesis to my parents Rogaiyeh Fazeli and Ahmad Mohammadi, and to my beloved son Sepehr (Minh).

Seyed Mohammad Mohammadi

New Delhi, June 2005