Acknowledgements

This thesis wouldn’t have been possible without the help, guidance and co-operation of my supervisor Prof. Anvita Abbi. And I sincerely thank and convey my sincere regards to her for that. She was always available with the critical remarks for the way I was going about my work; particularly the way I had formulated my questionnaire. She was always ready to help me with all the study materials she had. Her regularity and pace in her work has always amazed and inspired me. Despite the inconveniences due to my non-punctuality she showed great patience. I also want to thank her for providing me one of my foremost basic readings on aphasia. I remember on the field trip during my MA, how she was very kind towards me and all other students.

Without Prof. (Dr.) Ravi Nehru, my co-supervisor from the department of Neurology, Govind Ballabh Pant Hospital, New Delhi, who facilitated me with the basics of the present research, this thesis would have been incomplete. He has been with me as the teacher since 1996. His dedication to his area was always inspiring. He also included me in his Neurobehavior Clinic and Neurolinguistic Laboratory, where I worked for almost seven years since I joined my research program in linguistics. I remember he had said in the beginning of the program that “however little the scope was in this area, with conviction nothing is unachievable in this small world”. He asked me to be consistent in my work. He was always available to me as a teacher and also like a friend, and one could never demand more than that. I could always fall back on him for my personal crises also, which was a kind of support one can wish only in dreams. It was he who introduced me to the details of neurolinguistic analysis.

I also want to thank the neuro-physicians and senior residents at the G. B. Pant Hospital, particularly Dr. Sandeep Goel and Dr. Sanjeev, for they referred the aphasic patients to me very constantly as they came across any in the OPDs. It would be be very insensitive and insincere on my part if I do not thank Dr. Kavita Arora, a sincere and kind senior consultant in the department of Psychiatry at the same hospital, who further strengthened my faith in the sanctity of the clinical profession, and from her I learned a lot about dealing sensitively with patients. Her attitude towards learning things was always quite inspiring.

I also want to thank the coffee house attached to the hospital which had been the site of our discussions on the patients and the analysis and this suffered as it has now been closed for good. Those days are still fresh when I used to sit with Prof. Nehru, with his favorite and characteristic ‘black coffee’, Dr. Kavita, Dr. Anju, who was a kind-hearted clinical psychologist and generally avoided the coffee and Prasannanashu, occasionally present, in that and discussed the neurolinguistics, with momentary digressions, on the coffee table. I want to remember Dr. Anju Garg, here as she is no more with us. We will always miss her, an inevitable councilor of our Team, those days and the coffee house.
Acknowledgements

I was introduced to the area of Neurolinguistics in a course in my M.A. (Linguistics) under Dr. Franson David Manjali, an associate professor in the Center of Linguistics and English. He was the one who introduced me to the terminologies like aphasia, Broca’s/Wemicke’s aphasia, and the names like Luria, Hughlings-Jackson, Freud (in connection with aphasia) etc., and I am grateful to him for that. Even during my research he had all the good intentions of extending me help. He lent me a book by a neuroscientist Jean-Pierre Changeux called ‘A Neuronal Man’ (a book based on Freud’s Project for a Scientific Psychology) which further strengthened my conviction in neurolinguistic research and I thank him for that.

I also thank Prof. Vaishna Narang, who guided my M.Phil research and also promised to help me with materials and discussions whenever I needed them. I want to thank Prof. S. K. Sareen for believing in me.

I am also indebted to National Medical Library, New Delhi; library in G. B. Pant Hospital, New Delhi and Delhi University Central Reference Library. There I got my references – both articles and books. Delhi University Library was very welcoming, I noted. I also want to thank Prof. Yosef Grodzinsky, professor in linguistics and a well known researcher in Neurolinguistics, for providing his archive of writings and his willingness in further helps if at all I needed. To my queries, his response was very prompt. I am indebted to him for this.

I want to thank Prof. Ajay Sharma, the Director of Krishna Institute of Engineering & Technology, Ghaziabad, for having good faith in me and my capability. His encouragement has always boosted my self-confidence. I will never forget him in my life. I also want to remember my colleagues from the institute.

I thank my family – my parents, and my three brothers – for their constant support and encouragement and criticism, at times. Papa was always inspiring who constantly asked me to work hard. Mummy was always anxious about health and always asked me to eat well. My brothers were always available for help and always inquired about the status of my work which at times irritated me also but I know, it was for my betterment only. I am indebted to them for their love.

I am also grateful to my galaxy of friends – Biju Matthew, C. R. Pramod, Dimpi, Shailendra Mohan, T. G. Suresh, Raju, Farhat, Khushhal, Chand and everybody else for doing what they did for me. Raju, my friend since I was 13, always remained an entertaining intervention throughout my work, was always available on demand to help. Shailendra my immediate junior (not actually) but friend first, remained a very delightful company throughout my research and was always available, I actually missed him when he left this town for some period last year. C. R. Pramod, (popularly known as CRP in the friend circle) my neighbour and a close friend, was always willing to help me. He offered me the cups of tea in the last moments of my writings, and I shamelessly accepted that. Dimpi Divakaran is a silent friend from Kerala again, who was with me in my times of crisis very patiently, when I had a fall last year and hurt my head. Suresh, actually T. G. Suresh, was always delightful and intellectually inspiring through his positive and informative communications. But I did not know him when we stayed in the same hostel, i.e. Kaveri. He is now a deserving assistant professor in the department of Political Science in JNU. Khushhal and Chand, my juniors in my hostel, were happily ready to help me in my last days and were available for that.

I also want to remember my batch mates and friends since I joined JNU. All of them encouraged me to remain in this stream. Santosh Menon, who is now settled in Bangalore, was always good to me but then lot of times he misread my intentions which were always good. Sarbani Roy and Titas Mitra were always affectionate.

How can I forget my courageous subjects (patients) whose contribution in the thesis is incomparable, not just from the perspective of content, but also because of the optimism and zeal they displayed to recover and be healthy. I do not want to name them for mere ethical reasons. But they have been my source of inspiration to remain in this field. I have always felt attached to all of them as they always had faith in me. One thing I want to account here that during my data elicitation, I also marked improvement in their linguistic condition, which might be because of the stimulation of the impaired area of language. That is why I still have been in touch with them despite the fact that their data are of no use in my thesis. Their recovery, sometimes very marked, always gave me happiness and satisfaction. I want to dedicate my thesis to them and I hope, it will not demean them.

Last but not the least, I thank my wife Rachna, my companion since 1997, who has shared with me all the ups and downs since then, and has promised to keep doing so always. She has helped me in all walks of life and has been a constant support. I have learnt a lot from her.