ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Much has happened in the years that have gone into the writing of this thesis and the joy of seeing this work take shape has been no less than seeing my son, Divakar, grow along side. Needless to say, the nurturing of both has often led to traumatic moments in the lives of each! Seeing me through these crises, as always, has been Dr GJV Prasad, my guide, mentor and friend of many years. If it could be acknowledged in words what I owe to him not just in guiding me along this rocky road of research, but also for standing by me, he would surely be swamped! I owe many thanks to Kamala (Maam) as well for the regular push she gave me to speeden up. A PhD degree may be an important achievement for an academic but it is the relationships one builds in the process of acquiring it that are invaluable: knowing DRS Prasad and Kamala, better, these past few years has been one such experience.

This thesis would not have progressed at all without the timely support of the British Council, the Charles Wallace India Scholarship and in particular, the unstinted cooperation of Dr Rajni Badlani, that enabled me to undertake this project and collect archival material from Red Ladder at Leeds. Of course, for being there, literally, I am completely in Red Ladder's debt: thank you for staying alive! There are a number of 'RL' people whose generosity I must acknowledge: Kully Thiarai, Stefanie Gascoigne, Noel Greig and Ann Cross. Yet again, what has been remarkable has been the sharing of more than intellectual space with all these wonderful people.

There are others in England who I would like to thank: Amit and Jayati for being my caring hosts; Jonathan Meth (NPT), Prof. Trevor Griffiths (University of North London) and Michael Anderson (IPTR) for volunteering as much information as possible; Roland Rees (Foco Novo), John McGrath (7.84), Roland Muldoon (CAST), Anne Louise Wirgman and the people at the Theatre Museum Library for their time and involvement with my work. Theatre Companies like Cheek by Jowl, Half Moon, Grassmarket and so many others who willingly offered information - thank you.

Thanks are not enough to acknowledge my sisters and their families whose impatience to see the 'real thing' goaded me on. As did the encouragement of my parents/brothers/sisters-in-law. And to my friends, especially Mily and Gagan, whose eagerness to see 'The Thesis' was just the right kind of bolstering I often needed; hope they enjoy this.

In Janki Devi Memorial College, thanks to Dr Chakravarti for granting me leave to complete my work and taking a keen interest in it; thanks also to the English Department people for moments of relief and the occasional kicking to 'finish it off'.

Perhaps this Thesis would have remained a distant dream if Uttam had not pitched in: for being my sternest critic and bitter adversary while listening to my ideas, for painstakingly typing the entire work and indeed, for truly being my 'significant' other. I cannot even begin to thank him.

For all the other teachers who taught me: 'MM', 'Gill', 'KK', 'Shreeen Sir', 'HN', 'Rimli'; for Ravatji's kindness; for everything that the years at JNU have woven into the tapestry of my existence; I hope that this thesis bears adequate witness to all that I have gathered "epistemologically" and "ontologically"!

I would like to dedicate this to my parents: in memory of Baba who always believed I could do 'anything' and for Ma who feels I can do 'more than anything' - this is 'something' for you.
