ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

With great reverence I thank my supervisor Prof. K.R. Nayar, whose guidance, suggestions and feedback have been invaluable to this thesis work at various points of time. Dr. Nayar has not only been a guide in my academic pursuits but interactions with him have also enriched other aspects of my life. I am indeed deeply indebted to him for life.

I convey sincere thanks to all my teachers at CSMCH, who opened my mind to new ideas not only about health but also about life.

I thank the European Union for the financial assistance it provided to me through the Project 'Monitoring Shifts in Health Sector Policies, which has been instrumental in the completion of this work. I also thank Ms. Sunila Andrews, Mr. Jaime Quizon and Ms. Cristina Chard of the World Bank Institute for their cooperation.

I am grateful to Mr. Bankim Trivedi of Purandarpur, Kandi for being patient with me and engaging in long discussions that have enabled me to understand better, the social dimension of the problems of flood in that area. His help was also invaluable in that it threw greater light on the intricacies and complexities of the lives and livelihoods of flood victims. In no way shall I be able to repay his debt.

I am also grateful to the Principal Secretaries of the Department of Relief, the Govt. of West Bengal: Mr. Ingty and Mr. Nihilesh Das, Former District Magistrate of Murshidabad Mr. Manoj Pant, BDO of Kandi Mr. Bharat Biswas, Dr. J.Gandhimathi Deputy Secretary, Indian Red Cross Society, Prof. Vinod Kumar Sharma of National Centre for Disaster Management (NCDM), Indian Institute of Public Administration (IIPA), and many other government officials who provided me information related to this study. I thank Dr. Lipi Mukhopadhyay, Faculty of IIPA and Mrs Sunita Gulati, Deputy Librarian of IIPA for facilitating access to the wealth of books in their library.

A special thanks to Mr. Asit Baran Ghosh of Andulia for accompanying me through out my data collection at Saspara and Andulia. He helped me to acquaint myself better with the rural life of Rarh Bengal and patterns of community interaction at the 'Hizole'. Also the members of SPADE and SPONDON at Kandi, our great Anubha di, Rajarshi, Shukla, Amit, Amitabha, Tarak, Aniruddha, Sudipto, Saikat, Lakshman and others who have constantly been encouraging me ever since I came to know them in course of my work.

I am grateful to Mr. Nileen Putatunda for putting me in touch with Mr. Subhasish Debnath and Dr. Ashok Sarkar of SPADE Kolkata. I thank them for allowing me to use their infrastructure and research materials for my thesis work and for their inputs in data collection. I also thank Mr. Prasanta Chowdhary (Jethu) of Jemo, Kandi for his constant affectionate support during the course of data collection.
I have been extremely fortunate to have a most generous and loyal friend in Mr. Azad Singh Kalher, whose timely and critical suggestions have added new dimensions to this study. The joy of working with him is enormous. He is full of ideas and is way ahead of his contemporaries; I shall feel less burdened only if I could contribute a little to turn those ideas into reality.

I have had some of the most gifted colleagues in Saleema, Anupama and Anjum who have always been supportive in my work. This effort has been enriched by the incisive criticism that Anju and Bijoya have offered from time to time. I am grateful to both of them and Shreelakshmi and Chris for lending a helping hand during the last phase of the completion of this thesis.

No amount of gratitude will suffice to acknowledge the contribution that my wife Gargi, has made to this work. She has always been a pillar of strength and support in my life. She has borne my absence during this first experience of parenthood with courage and patience so that I may engage wholeheartedly in my academic pursuits. For this I shall be forever indebted to her.

My brother Bubai who has been supporting me throughout and has been a source of constant encouragement. His perseverance and devotion to work has been the greatest inspiration in my life.

I can only say many thanks to my parents, parents-in-law, uncle and his family, aunts and all other relatives who have been patient with me and encouraged my work all these years.

My special thanks to Prof. Kalyan Rudra of Habra Chaitanya College and Dr. Graham Chapman of Lancaster University, UK who helped me to understand the magnitude and ferocity of the September 2000 flood in West Bengal and the possible repercussions that human beings are likely to face due to the ecological imbalances created in the pursuit of 'development'.

I am grateful to the villagers of Saspara whose contribution to this work has been seminal in terms of the time that they spent with me in the sometimes arduous task of data collection apart from the affection and hospitality that they offered me. I would find this work a success only if those 'Banbhasi' people get benefits out of this fruit of labour.

My sincere thanks to the staff at CSMCH, especially Mrs. M.D. Rastogi, Mr. Dinesh Joshi and Amit for meeting my untimely demands. Also the administrative staff, Mrs. Krishna Bhatia, Mr. Dharamraj and Mr. Brahmparakash for their support through my study at the Centre. I also thank the technical staff Dr. Lakhan Singh and Malobika di for their kind support during my days of difficulty.

There have been numerous other friends who have supported me in various ways throughout this research work, whose names could not be mentioned here, but will surely be remembered and I shall remain ever grateful to them for the myriad ways in which they have contributed to this work.
