Acknowledgement

This thesis would never have been completed without the encouragement and guidance of my supervisor Prof Parimal Kumar Das. He encouraged me to take up research on a topic on which very little had been done. He helped me to organise my thought systematically. Moreover I will always remember the personal concern and care he has shown towards me in the last seven years.

Much of the material I have consulted for this thesis was made available to me by Dr. Greg Fry, of the Australian National University. The interest, care and attention that he paid to me and my work is something I will never forget. Thanks are also due to Johanna Sutherland not only for helping with internet sites but for showing me a bit of Australia as well.

Dr. Colin Hunt, Prof Ramesh Thakur, Dr. Dauvergne, Dr. Brij Lal for agreeing to the interviews and helping me.

I am grateful for the generosity of the Department of International Relations at ANU for allowing me to use their facilities. The ANU libraries, and the National Library of Australia for letting me use their services. The Toad Hall residence for agreeing to accommodate me in their hostel.

At the end I would like to thank my friends and my family for encouraging me to complete this task and for their love and affection.

4 July 1999, New Delhi

ANITA KANUNGO