ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Formally remembering all those who have helped you is surely one of the more pleasant tasks associated with the writing of a dissertation. First of all, I would like to thank Dr. R.S. Gupta under whose friendly and resourceful guidance this dissertation has taken shape. Often research and stress go hand in hand, but never so when one is working with Dr. Gupta. He ensures, by precept and example, that the element of fun and the spirit of adventure inherent in the study of literature is not dissipated, even as we give ourselves to the rigours of research.

To my wife, Sonya Ghosh, I offer special kind of thanks for being there for me. God only knows what I would have done without her - among other things, I know for a fact that without her direct and indirect help, I would never have been able to finish this dissertation.

Words of gratitude always seem a bit gratuitous when it comes to thanking one's parents. Also there is a structural problem. One can begin, yes, but where does one stop? However, there remains one specific thing which we often take for granted, but which I would like to isolate and thank my parents for. The start of a Ph.D. dissertation seems to me to be a particularly appropriate place to tell Mrs. and Mr. Ramesh Chandra that their son will always be grateful for the gift of education; and to tell Mrs. and Mr. S.N. Ghosh how much their son-in-law appreciates the care, concern and consideration shown to him, especially when he was working on this dissertation.

Can there be education without teachers? Of my teachers, I particularly wish to remember the late Rev. Wilzbacher and the late Mrs. Muriel Wasi, for not just communicating but infecting me with their impassioned enthusiasm for literature. Also, Professor A.N. Kaul for making me aware of all that goes into the act of writing. I learnt more about writing from a page of a Dostoyevsky assignment that he corrected long years ago, than from anything else, ever.

Friendship, Yeats said somewhere, was all the house he had, a sentiment I can well understand specially when I think of Shyam Bhargava, Madhu Ramnath, Amrit Mathur, Ajit Singh, Ajit Duara, Rukun Advani, Ravi Vasudevan, Mukul Mangalik, Ramu Damodaran, Rajiv Jain, Rajesh Singha, A. Chaterjee, Takahide Takahashi, Sunil Gupta and Sunil Tandon. Over the years, patiently and without complaints, they have heard me out whenever I have launched forth on Hawthorne. Very special thanks are due to Arjun Mahey, who, during the last few months, took it upon himself to see that I finish the dissertation in a given time frame. He forced me to set weekly deadlines for myself and through constant, rather rude reminders via the email, saw to it that I met them.

My thanks also go to institutions and libraries without whose aid this work would not have been possible. Support for the research came from Delhi University and the Fulbright Foundation. Delhi University gave me Study Leave, while the Fulbright Foundation gave me a scholarship to go to the University of Pittsburgh as a Fulbright scholar in 1997. Apart from the University of Pittsburgh library, I have also used the A.S.R.C. library in Hyderabad and the J.N.U. and the D.U. library in Delhi. I am grateful to the staff of all these libraries for their unfailing kindness and attention.

At Pittsburgh, I have accrued an enormous debt to Professor Jonathan Arac and the late Dr. Carol Kay who went out of their way to encourage my work. In Pittsburgh, I also benefited from conversations with two eminent Hawthorne scholars - Dr. Frederick Newberry and Dr. Richard Gale. Later, I met and enjoyed interacting with Professor Emory Elliott of the University of California.

I specially wish to acknowledge with gratitude the moral support of all my colleagues at D.D.U.C., especially that of my colleagues in the Department of English, Anubha Mukherjee and Dr. Jayini Adyapak, and also of Professor R.G. Saxena, the former Principal of D.D.U.C. I have also received valuable help from my former colleagues, Dr. G.J.V. Prasad of JNU and Dr. Bhasin of ARSD.

Very special thanks to Rajesh Ratnakar, for being the supportive brother he has always been. Thanks also to Toots Dilip and Vandana Maurice for doing their bit in making the world a better place to live in by giving us Sasha and Amun respectively. Special thanks to Vandana and Maurice for taking me around New England, specially to all the Hawthorne sites. My thanks also go to all the Barthakurs for the innumerable cups of fragrant Assamese tea, and immense affection over the years. In this age of psychoanalysis, I would like to specially remember those who helped to make my own childhood a particularly happy one: Chunnu Mama, Bacha Bhaiya and the late Mama ji. Also Daya. Finally, a very special word of thanks to Tejpal Singh - the expert who always had the answer to all my computer problems.
