ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

"There is no pursuit higher than that of knowledge for its own sake" - The Bhagavad-Gita.

For a civil servant in the autumn of his career and with full time administrative responsibilities, it was no easy decision to embark upon this daunting journey. This thesis would never have been possible but for the unstinting support and encouragement of the people whose contribution I wish to gratefully acknowledge.

First and foremost I would like to thank my wife, Chuden Tshering, who has without doubt been the prime inspiration for this project. Knowing that a Ph.D degree has been high on my life’s wish list, she egged me on during times when I was plagued with serious self doubts. But for her constant encouragement, this work would probably never have been completed.

I am grateful to my supervisor, Dr. Amitabh Mattoo for patiently introducing me to the concepts of 'regime theory' and for being available at short notices for consultation. The high standards that he set have hopefully improved the quality of this work.

I am grateful to Professor R.C. Sharma for sowing the seeds of this project in my mind and for his persuasiveness in convincing me that it was never too late in life to aspire towards a Ph.D degree.
Thanks are also due to Dr Vijay Kelkar, former Secretary, Petroleum, Government of India and H.E. Arne Walther former Ambassador of Norway to India for providing, important insights into the political economy of international petroleum.

I am also thankful to Dr. Krishna Gopal for his very valuable assistance in the library and in the procurement of important books.

I also wish to convey my sincere thanks to Shri S.N. Singh, my Private Secretary at the Gujarat Industrial Development Corporation for very uncomplainingly assisting in the typing work.

In the end this work has been possible only because HE willed it so.
