ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

A thesis cannot be the work of only one individual. I have no words to express my deep sense of gratitude to my supervisor Dr. Dawa Norbu, Associate Professor, School of International Studies (SIS), Jawaharlal Nehru University, (JNU), New Delhi, Honorary Fellow, University of Durham (U.K.), for sparing much of his precious time in guiding and inspiring me throughout the course of this work. Though the discussions were often heated, the end result was that they honed up my analytical skills for an objective view of the issues in question.

I would like to record my special indebtedness to Prof. Giri Deshingkar, Director, Institute of Chinese Studies, New Delhi, for his frequent and apt suggestions, which made me to go deep into the study. Alongside, I shall be failing in my duty if I do not express my sincere gratitude to Dr. K. Warrikoo, Associate Professor, SIS, JNU.

I am very much indebted to the library staff of Jawaharlal Nehru University, Delhi University, Indian Council of World Affairs, Institute for Defence Studies and Analysis, Teen Murti, Tibetan Library, Chinese Embassy (New Delhi) and Institute of Chinese Studies (New Delhi) for their kind cooperation.

Several pages could be filled with the names of my friends who, in numerous ways, contributed to this study. To all of them, it goes without saying, my thanks are due.

Finally, I wish to express my heartfelt gratitude to my beloved sisters Sukanya, Padma, Pushpa, and brother Ashok. They were the greatest force who kept pushing me forward in my academic endeavours. But for their inspiration this work would not have seen the light of the day. They endured the pangs of separation and ordeals of managing the domestic affairs all alone by themselves.
with patience, kindness and humour. Of all, my eldest sister Sukanya, who always finds a way to help me, whether it be as an indispensable friend or as the compassionate bystander, deserves my special thanks. She, in fact, arranged my life in this case.

If there is anything at all in this work it is from what the literature has transmitted to me. If there is not it is because this writer is at fault. Though I have taken every care to prepare this manuscript, I take the responsibility for the remaining errors, omissions or biases, of which some are inevitable.
