Acknowledgement

I am greatly indebted to my supervisor Prof. Anjan Mukherji, without whose help this thesis would have remained a distant dream. I am particularly thankful to him for keeping his confidence in me even during the toughest moments of this research work and providing me with constant moral support. He has always been most sensitive towards my personal constraints, for which I am immensely grateful to him.

Prof. Kunal Sengupta took a great interest in my thesis and was particularly involved with my work. His help and encouragement were absolutely necessary for this thesis. Words are not sufficient to thank him.

I am thankful to an anonymous referee of the International Journal of Industrial Organisation for a very helpful set of comments, which I have used to revise Chapter Five of this thesis.

I would like to thank the faculty members of our Centre for the help they have extended to me at different points of time. Prof. Ram Prasad Sengupta was always very encouraging and I gratefully acknowledge his help and support throughout my stay in JNU. A lot of thanks are due to Prof. Sudipto Dasgupta and Prof. Satya P. Das for some very useful discussions. I am particularly thankful to Dr. Krishnendu Ghosh Dastidar and Dr. Prabal Roy Chowdhury as I have greatly benefited from the long hours of discussions with them. Krishnendu-da, Prabal-da, Dipankar and Subrata-da were very encouraging throughout my work. Mousumi, Ananya, Sabyasachi and Indranil deserve special mention for their help at different points of time. They were always very friendly and created an environment of research and academic discourse around me, which was very conducive for this work. The suggestions made by Ananya, Mousumi and Dipankar have helped me improve the presentation of this thesis. I am thankful to Ranja for her concern and for her effort to cheer me up in bad times. I owe a lot to Vinish for some very useful discussion and also for providing me with a number of important references from IGIDR and later on from Ahmedabad. He was also very encouraging throughout. Perhaps, a thanks here is grossly inadequate for his help. Among the juniors, Jayanta, Nandan and Sumit were always very cooperative. I would also like to thank Kuldip-ji and Paramita-di for their help.

Among my earlier teachers, I would like to thank Gora Chand Nag, Dr. Anil Kumar Ghosh and Bijoy Krishna Bag. I developed an interest in Economics after coming in touch with Gora-da and it was he who motivated me towards pursuing a career in research even in my under-graduate days. I thank Rajib, Dibyendu, Raghunath and Abhijit (Ray) who are friends from my school days and whose sincerity and love were of great value to me at different points of time. I fondly recall Abhijit (Mukherji) and Sabyasachi and some other friends from my College, Narendrapur, for the sincerity extended to me when it was needed most. I would like to thank them from the bottom of my heart.

My greatest debt is to my parents. Their complete faith in me gave me the confidence to live life the way I have wanted to. The best part of it is pursuing the Ph.D. itself, when I could have served their needs in much better ways. My younger brother Tanmoy was equally understanding and adjusting to the constraints of our family. They are the happiest persons today as their sacrifice bears fruit in the form of this thesis. I have no words to express my gratitude to them.

Lastly, I bear the responsibility of all the errors in this thesis.
