Acknowledgments

First of all I would express my heartfelt gratitude to my supervisor Dr. G.J.V. Prasad for guiding and encouraging me throughout the course of this thesis. Without his willingness to allow me to venture into uncharted territory, many arguments made in this thesis would not have been possible. I would also thank the entire faculty of the Centre of Linguistics and English for their support in the course of this research.

Besides my supervisor, I have benefited enormously from discussions with many academics and friends who were kind enough to lend me an ear whenever required. I received several valuable suggestions from Ayesha and Madhu who were very supportive. I would also express my gratitude to Aijaz Ahmed. Both Abhay and Indranil, despite hailing from widely different disciplines, played their part as friends most valiantly. I would also thank Jyotirmoy for his invaluable insights.

One of the hazards of doing research in a Third World university, even a very good one, is that one is always in the dearth of indispensable books. I would sincerely thank Anubhuti for helping me with crucial texts without which my research would have faced serious roadblocks. Many of her suggestions were useful and timely.

I would take this opportunity to thank the teachers from my college, Miranda House, for their sustained support and encouragement. The office staff of CLE, JNU Library, and Sahitya Academy Library also cooperated wholeheartedly with me. Mr. Rawat from CLE and Mr. Mallick from the JNU library deserve special mention.

I would take this opportunity to thank scores of friends and comrades from JNU and Delhi University who supported me throughout the course of this thesis. Among them, I would particularly thank Puran, Rohit, Neelgagan and Surender, who were admirable in their camaraderie. Parimal, Subhanil and Robert also deserve many thanks. P.M.S. Grewal was a constant source of encouragement and care. Vijoo, too, provided support and reassurance as a fellow traveler. I must not miss this chance to thank Suneeta.

My family has been eagerly awaiting the completion of this thesis. There are no words to express the contribution of my father to this thesis. Without his affection, guidance and incomparable support this thesis would not have been possible. I would genuinely thank my mother for loving and caring for me, and for investing her dreams in me. Her dedication to my research at times surpassed my own and helped to keep me on track. I also thank my brother for putting up with the excessive demands of his younger sister. My bhabhi for being supportive and kind. And my young nephew, Ali, for keeping my spirits high.

Last but not the least I would thank Prasenjit for always being there for me. His rigorous intellect has often stopped fancy from outrunning fact in the course of this study.