ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

The completion of this dissertation has left me indebted to many. I would like to take this opportunity to express my gratitude for all the help I received.

My gratitude to my supervisor, Professor Kalyan Sanyal is immense. I am grateful to him for introducing me to the basic issue of this work and guiding me to explore its different intricate dimensions.

I also express my sincere gratitude to my associate supervisor, Professor Arup Mallik. His guidance in the context of Macro-accounting and his insistence on analytical rigour have contributed significantly to making this study substantially clearer.

However, for all remaining errors I alone remain responsible.

I must take this opportunity to express my gratitude to Professor Sarmila Banerjee.

I am eternally grateful to her for her valuable support and for the extreme patience with which she saw me through the various phases of my impatience.

I would also like to express my gratitude to Professors Rajat Acharyya, Sudipto Mundle, Abhirup Sarkar, G. Omkarnath, Ramprashad Sengupta, Aparajita Mukherjee, V.K. Natraj, Achin Chakraborty, Chandana Ghosh and Sarmishtha Sen for their comments at different stages of the work.

I am grateful to all my teachers in the Department of Economics, Calcutta University for their help and encouragement.

I thank my ex-colleagues of St. Xavier's College, Kolkata and my present colleagues at the Department of Economics and Politics, Visva-Bharati, Santiniketan for their support.
I must thank the staff of different libraries, especially of the Centre for Development Studies, Thiruvananthapuram and of the Department of Economics, Calcutta University.

Acknowledgements are due to all the members of Cybernetics, Lake Market, Kolkata, who shouldered with utmost professionalism the responsibility of typesetting, printing and binding of the document.

My debts to my friends are too numerous to mention. They have been instrumental in raising doubts which contributed to my work. They also helped in relaxing many a tense moments.

Finally, my gratitude to my late grandfather, parents, wife and all other family members for providing both moral support and intellectual inspiration through the entire period. I am thankful to my family for the active support that I received.
