Acknowledgments

During my research for this thesis I have accumulated a large number of debts. The constant support and encouragement I received from people around me have been a great source of motivation and have livened my spirits whenever they were down.

In particular, I must thank my thesis supervisor Prof. Niraja Gopal Jayal, who has supported me all through. It was her unbounded patience and graceful forbearance both during my long period of fieldwork and to my consistent failures to meet deadlines that allowed me to remain focused on the work. The liberty she gave for me to articulate my ideas, however unbaked they are, along with her observations and valuable suggestions have propelled me to think and write better. The interest she took in my work right from the beginning, the time she spent on reading and correcting my several and at times shapeless drafts, and her words of encouragement have goaded me to act more purposefully. She been a great source of inspiration and I am glad that this work was done under her supervision.

I am also greatly indebted to Prof. Kuldeep Mathur, my co-supervisor for his support and the confidence he reposed in me. He has never ceased to appreciate my efforts and his kind words of encouragement have always motivated me. All my teachers at the Centre for Political Studies have contributed in different ways to the understanding I have developed on the subject. I especially thank Professor(s) Zoya Hasan, Sudha Pai, Bishnu Mahapatra and Gajendran for their support and advice. I would also like to remember and thank Professor(s) Munusamy and Venugopal, who taught me at undergraduate level, for the knowledge they imparted and the affection they showered on me.

The fellowship I received from the University Grants Commission was of great assistance in my research, and in particular for the fieldwork of this thesis. Availability of theoretical literature on my area of research has always been at a premium. With the access and support I gained from some libraries I was able to partly overcome the problem. In this regard, I would like to remember the JNU Central Library, Nehru Memorial Library, and the libraries of the Indian Institute of Public Administration, CAPART, PRIA, Development Alternatives and the American Resource Center. Some of the staff of our university have been very kind to me and have always been eager to help me in the administrative problems that cropped up with unerring regularity. Mr. Satish at the School office deserves my heartfelt thanks for all his help. I would also like to thank Mr. Arora, Mr. Gyan, and Ashish.

My field research was a learning experience and I received tremendous and unqualified support from many. Foremost are the several women respondents who readily shared their life experiences with me, without whose cooperation this work would have certainly not been possible. I would like to express my sincere gratitude to Mr. Samy, Ms. Christi, and Ms. Radha. I am also greatly indebted to Manjula, Nandakumar, Senthil, Amudha, Nirmala, Muruganandam and several others for ensuring the smoothness of my field investigation. They all shared with me their experiences and made it possible for me to gain newer and useful insights.

My stay at JNU has been a great experience, to which my friends contributed immensely. I am glad that I have friends like Anbu, Kailash, Madhavan, Pavananthi, Prabha, Rajesh, Sanjay, Sekar, Srini, and Venkat around me. I have always enjoyed my friendship with Amitabh, Arvind, Aseem, Basant, Benoy, Dhruba, Ganga, Jana, Mano, Mayil, Prasad, Razi and Tadi. All my friends have been more than ready to share the work burden in one way or the other. Stephen, Killi and Thiru were of great help in the material collection. I thank them all.

The inmates of Kottam have always been eager to help me and have shown their love and affection in several ways over the years. I am deeply indebted to all of them, and especially Papamma. I have always found her affable mannerism, firmness in decision and resoluteness inspiring and are traits I aspire to emulate. Sethu mama has been a great friend and well-wisher. He has always taken a keen interest in my academic progress and has helped me on numerous occasions. My friend, Valavan has been gracious enough to forgive the depressing regularity with which I communicated with him.

This thesis would not have been possible without the overwhelming support and encouragement of my family. My sister Anandhi has always been kind and affectionate to me, and has wished success in all my endeavours. Dhaiva has been a good friend and I have enjoyed his company. My nephew Yegan has been an immense source of joy for all of us. His warmth and lively pranks helped me forget the many disappointments of the fieldwork and maintain my cool. Amma and Appa have ensured that their children get the best things in life and remain in very many ways my source of strength. They have been my first teachers and have made me what I am. I owe everything in my life to them and dedicated this thesis to their love and affection.
