ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

This thesis is the result of destiny. Most people at a particular age feel that studying is an arduous effort and ceases with having completed one's formal education. Therefore, the sudden urge to write a thesis on a subject like 'Impact of Tourism on Sustainable Development at this age would appear strange, to say the least. The story began with my supervisor Prof. R.C. Sharma, appearing as a quintessential 'Guru' one fine day and urging me to take up this study, in spite of my rather heavy schedule in Government. Prof. Sharma's daily encouragement and guidance was of perennial help in putting this work together. It would not be an exaggeration if I state that without his constant encouragement and calming influence this work would not have been completed and would have never seen the light of day. I therefore, owe my deepest gratitude to my Guru, Prof. R.C. Sharma.

Since, a large quantity of material and information came from the Documentation Centre of the WTO, I would like to thank the WTO for its enormous contribution in providing me with updated and contemporary information on the tourism scenario in the world and Asia in particular. I would like to thank Mr. Zu Jing, who very readily provided me with information and statistics on China's tourism.

My colleague Dr. G. Raveendran provided unfailing assistance in being the interactive partner for conceptional discussions. Mr. A. K. Bhatt the Director of the Indian Institute of Travel & Tourism Management (IITTM), was of enormous help in allowing me to tap the material from the Institute's library at Gwalior.
I must thank my colleagues in the Department of Tourism in Jammu and Kashmir who have provided me with material on the specific case study in Ladakh and my thanks are also due to, Mr. Rajiv Talwar, Administrator, Lakshadweep, who has provided me with information on the ‘Environment Impact Assessment’ of the Lakshadweep Islands.

I thank the local administration in various countries such as Bali in Indonesia, South Korea, Thailand, Maldives and Australia for providing me an opportunity to interact with tourism professionals and experts who gave me tremendous insight into macro and micro level planning of tourism in their respective countries.

As a member of the WTO Environment Committee and the Chairperson of the PATA (India Chapter) Environment Committee, I had the opportunity of listening to and interacting with eminent experts and professionals during the meetings. I am grateful for their insights.

Such a laborious task could never have been completed without the diligence and the dedicated effort put in by Ms. Rinku Walia, most ungrudgingly. I am deeply thankful to her and owe her an enormous Karmic debt.

My gratitude extends to the broad umbrella of the Ministry of Tourism which provided me with a canvas for this work. In this context, I would like to thank Dr. G. Sundaram for giving me the encouragement and permission to carry out this daunting task and finally, I would like to mention that not even a word would be possible without the benign blessings and the wish of the Almighty.
