ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Leena Abraham, my guide and friend, has been a constant support in the course of my research work and the writing of the thesis. I thank her for being a non-assertive and democratic teacher. Given my constraints as a part-time student, and thereby of having had to maintain a balance between the research and my employment, Leena's patience and support was invaluable. Her meticulous checking of my draft chapters and critical comments have improved the thesis immensely.

I thank Professor Padma Velaskar and Professor Nandini Manjrekar for providing critical comments on the synopsis, and in the discussions at different phases of the research. I also thank Professor K. Ravindran, especially for his suggestions on methodology of the research. I also thank Dr Suresh. M for his critical comments on the findings of the research.

I would like to thank the staff of the libraries of Tata Institute of Social Sciences, Centre for Development Studies, Thiruvananthapuram, Public Library, Thiruvananthapuram and the library of Eklavya, Hoshangabad.

I thank Comrade Kamalasanan for the open and sincere discussions on Kuttanad that were very inspiring. Not only did he discuss on Kuttanad of bygone times, but also shared his hopes for the times to come. His earnestness and simplicity, rendered a quality of non-comouflage. I thank Rajagopal for sharing the extensive documentary films he had made on Kuttanad, that became a valuable resource for my thesis.

I thank Yogesh Diwan for the interest shown in my work, and for the extensive discussions we had on agriculture in neoliberalism. His critical comments and the sharing of several reference materials were very helpful. He travelled with me in some segments of the field, and I thank him for his keen observations. I wish to acknowledge Professor Kumar Sanjay Singh of the University of Delhi for sharing readings on regions, and for his comments on my main findings. I had the pleasure of being accompanied in some segments of the field by Achu, a passionate traveller, whose instincts and observations were very helpful. I thank my mother for sharing and discussing experiences of Kuttanad, as she has had a long-time association with the region. I acknowledge her efforts in helping to procure Malayalam literature and materials. I thank Sebastian John for sharing with me some of his photographs on Kuttanad.

Josichen had helped immensely in connecting me with a large cross section of people in Kainakary. Jayan was exceptionally helpful with his readiness to discuss at any time, his sharing of documents, and in his own words 'any work on the region, if carefully done, becomes an agency for social change'. I acknowledge Rateendran for his lengthy discussions, and the keenness shown on the subject. He had shared useful documents, and discussed very openly on the role of the Left politics in Kerala. I especially thank Thankamma, Kamala, Janaki, Sheeja and other women of Kuttanad, who threw light on the experiences and aspirations of ordinary women of Kuttanad.

There are several others who have helped in different ways. Bijitha helped with the final editing and formatting. Last but not the least, I wish to thank Shaji, Nimmy, Kuttan and Kunnava for making my stay in Trivandrum, during the course of my work, pleasurable with all necessary supports, and similarly to Leela and Rajan for extending a similar support and warmth during my stay in Mumbai.

Yemuna Sunny
