Acknowledgements

Accomplishing the work of this thesis would not have been possible without the constant encouragement, guidance and support of certain people. The name uppermost in my mind in this regard, is that of my supervisor, Prof. S.D. Muni. It was his encouragement that gave me the necessary confidence to venture into this little explored area of research. And it was he, who also ensured that this work reached its fruition by being clearly emphatic and demanding, whenever I had tended to slacken in my pursuit of research.

During the course of my study and especially during my extensive field work in Nepal, I have constantly realised that how research is more of a team work rather than an individual effort. In Nepal, numerous people have helped me in various ways, the list is too long for individual acknowledgement. Nevertheless, special mention must be made of Prof. Lok Raj Bara. He had been extremely kind in extending every possible help whenever I had sought to gain from his expertise in Nepalese politics. I express my deep sense of gratitude to him. I am also grateful to a host of Nepali scholars including Dr. K.B. Bhattachan, Prof. G.S. Nepali, Dr. D.R. Dahal, Dr. P.R. Sharma and Dr. Hari Bansh Jha for enlightening me on various facets of Nepali society. To Dr. Mohammad Mohsin, Dr. Hamid Ansari, Dr. Abullaish and Salim Mia Ansari, I am immensely grateful for providing me an insight into the Muslim society of Nepal. I thank all the helpful staff of the Tribhuvan University Library, Centre for Nepal and Asian Studies and Central Bureau of Statistics in Kathmandu.

Collection of data from various districts in the Nepal Terai and Hills would not have been possible without the unflinching help and cooperation of so many people. I fondly remember them all, and extend my heartfelt thanks to Bamdev Chetri, Lok Bahadur Thapa, Narbada Sharma, Tara Dhakal, Rais A. Khan, Nasiruddin Ansari, Salim Shah, Khursheed Bhai and Mukut Pal, for taking personal care and ensuring that I do not face any problem during my stay at various places in Nepal.

I wish to thank all the respected faculty members of our South Asian Studies Division in JNU, and especially Dr. M.P. Lama for showing interest in my work and helping me with his personal collection of materials.

Thanks are due to all the helpful staff of our own JNU Library, and Nehru Memorial Library, New Delhi. And a special word of thanks to Mr. H.K. Batra for being patient with the typing.

The contribution of my friends during the crucial stages of this study has been immense. I remember Sanchita, Debolina, Vijaya and Radha for helping me in several ways through their support and cooperation.

To Sonika, I will remain ever grateful for showing me how to keep the ‘humour’ intact in life and boosting my morale during my occasional bouts of despondency and inadequacy in dealing with the complexities of research. No amount of thanks would be adequate for Bharati, for agreeing to do the tedious job of proof reading; and Abhiroop for helping me with his computer skills during the final stages of this study.

I express my sincerest gratitude to Mr. Arun Sahu for his crucial help during the completion stages of this study.

Finally, I express my indebtedness to Professor Muni for remaining sincerely committed to his patient guidance even after he had assumed the post of Indian Ambassador to Laos. I also specially thank Mrs. Muni for being always so kind and loving. Lastly, I thank my family and especially my brother for bearing with my demanding moods and for being extremely encouraging throughout. Needless to say, the constant support of my family gave me the ultimate moral strength to complete this study.
