Acknowledgement

First of all I would like to bow in the feet of my Guru whom we respectfully call Maharajji. It is because of his blessings and inducement that I entered this huge field of Indian intellectual tradition enjoying gradually its nectar whatever little my capacity permits. I also bow to Swamiji, his disciple who occupies the same place for us, after his leaving of the mortal abode.

I would like to acknowledge my Guide Prof. Ujjwala Jha, under whom I had the first instance of learning this system of Pūrva-Mīmāṁsā. It is because of her that I have acquired a particular approach of looking into this system. She has been a constant source of inspiration and help since the time of my post-graduation. It was because of her encouragement especially during the final stage that I could take the present work to completion. She has been a source of learning for me in many ways.

I would also like to extend my thanks to Dr. Devdatta Patil under whom and in whose pāṭhaśāla, I had the opportunity to learn the systems Nyāya and Mīmāṁsā traditionally for a few years. The necessary sanskāra required even for entering into such technical treatises was acquired by me during the period of my study with him.

I would also like to thank the various Directors of Centre of Advanced Study in Sanskrit (CASS) namely Prof. B.K. Dalai, Prof. Ravindra Muley as well as my Guide, who gave me an opportunity to work as a student in the acclaimed Centre and helped me whenever it was necessary.

It is indeed important to thank the Staff of the manuscript library of Sarasvati Bhawan Library, Varanasi and especially the Bhandarkar Oriental Research Institute (BORI), Pune for providing me the copy of the present manuscript. I would also like to extend my thanks to staffs of the various manuscript libraries throughout India who helped me during my visit there.

I am extremely thankful to the library staff of CASS, Deccan College and BORI for their help.
It would not be inappropriate to thank the Heads and my colleagues in Deccan College Post-Graduate and Research Institute, who heartily supported and encouraged me in completing the present work.
I would also like to remember my friends, too many to be named, who have been a source of learning and encouragement in more than one way all throughout.
The present work would not have been possible without the support and encouragement from my family members, my parents and especially my brother who initially supported me in many ways.
There are various persons and incidents associated with them that are responsible for the present series of events. These play an equally important part during various stages of completion of a work. I take this opportunity to remember and thank all of these persons in general, who could not be thanked individually through this short acknowledgement.
