Writing this thesis has been possible due to the immense support I have received from several sources. I am highly indebted to my supervisor Prof. Amlan Dasgupta. His critical comments and technical information on several issues disciplined my academic exercise. At the same time, his tolerance and patient hearing have always encouraged me.

My interaction with the faculty of Women’s Studies Department at Jadavpur University clarified many doubts regarding the theoretical premises of my thesis.

I am grateful to the CIEFL Library, Hyderabad, National Library, Kolkata, British Council Library, Kolkata and the Central Library of Visva Bharati, Santiniketan, for enabling me to make use of relevant books and journals. Anjan Sen has generously helped me to procure a number of my reference books from abroad. I sincerely thank Shri Amit Sen and Shri Sujoy Lahiri for helping me with the proof and lay-out of the final thesis.

I am ingratiated to the Department of English, Visva Bharati for enabling me to access several internet resources including the JSTOR and the Project Muse. Moreover, Google Books was of immense help for allowing me to read on the web many rare books on the subject that are not available otherwise in my country.

My parents have always encouraged me in this venture. I would never be able to thank my husband enough for all those new directions he has cited in my thoughts. In fact he is the one who kindled my special interests in the eighteenth century and its culture.

Working on this subject has been very exciting and satisfying. Those related areas that could not be touched upon here due to limitations of scope would be taken up in my future academic endeavours.
