Maratha penetration in Rajasthan has a rich historiography. The coverage of the Maratha-Rajput conflict in the works of James Tod and J.N. Sarkar is highly informative. Later historical writings on Maratha penetration in Rajasthan and Rajput Maratha relations during the eighteenth century have been largely Rajput and Rajasthan centric in approach. Moreover, in all these writings the focus is on political developments which brought the Maratha intervention and events that followed the Maratha entry. An in-depth account of the nature of Maratha domination in Rajasthan in the context of the processes of state formation in complex 18th century which is marked by both 'chaos' as well as 'continuity' has been long overdue. Plenty of groundwork having been done by J.N. Sarkar, G.S. Sardesai and local historians of Rajasthan, K.S. Gupta, G.R. Parihar and R.K. Saxena and my fascination with history of 18th century Rajasthan encouraged me to explore the Maratha presence in Rajasthan in a broader perspective to encompass hitherto unexplored but equally important aspects of the Maratha-Rajput encounter.

I am indebted to my supervisor Professor Dilbagh Singh for guiding me through this mammoth exercise involving a long journey into never ending mass of primary and secondary sources on the theme of my research. His rich experience and knowledge of primary sources in Rajasthani and Marathi proved indispensable.
The late Professor A.R. Kulkarni, Professor Emeritus, Department of History, Poona University very kindly shared with me his knowledge about Marathi sources and gave valuable suggestions.

I am grateful to the Director and Staff of Rajasthan State Archives, Bikaner for allowing me access to all available primary sources pertaining to my research work. It would have not been possible to complete my research without tapping valuable collection of records at Bikaner Archives. I am particularly thankful to Dr. Mahendra Kumar Khadgawat, the Director of the Archives for granting permission to obtain photocopies of a large number of archival documents.

I also thank Dr. Hukum Singh Bhati, the former Director, Shodh Samstan, Chopasani, Jodhpur for drawing my attention to some published Marathi and Rajasthani primary sources.

Staff members of Jaykar Library, Poona University, Pune, JNU Library, CHS DSA Library and Nehru Memorial Museum and Library extended valuable support in course of my visits to these libraries for my research. I am also thankful to Mr. Babu Kurian for typing the thesis.

I owe a great deal of gratitude to my father Shri Dilbagh Singh for his constant encouragement and endless reminders which motivated me to complete this research work. My mother late Mrs. Krishna Devi and grand mother-in-law Smt. Vimla Sharma always inspired me to realize my dream.
Special mention must be made of my wife Avantika Maken Tanwar who always wished that my Ph. D could be completed at the earliest. Love and affection of my children Anirudha, Adikarta and Abhistada gave me much needed emotional support.

Lastly, I thank all my friends for their moral support.
