ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

There are many persons who helped me, directly or indirectly, to complete this dissertation. Their contribution is immeasurable and although it is impossible to thank all of those who helped, I will try my best to mention those people whose impact was most felt.

I am highly indebted to my teacher, supervisor and mentor, Dr. S.K. Dasgupta, Retired Professor, Department of Applied Psychology, University of Calcutta, whose direction and guidance allowed me to make my dream into a reality. The culmination of this dissertation reflects the motivation, encouragement and support he provided to me. His time and patience in reviewing this dissertation for conceptual and stylistic errors helped me greatly.

I would like to express my deep gratitude, warm appreciation and sincere thanks to my other teachers of the Department of Applied Psychology, specially to Dr. Anjali Ray, Head of the Department of Applied Psychology, University of Calcutta for her thoughtful suggestion and indispensable help as and when required. The clear insightful feedback of all my committee members was invaluable in focusing this study. In addition to their thoughtful evaluation of the finished dissertation, my committee members provided me their kind suggestions and advice.

I am grateful to the concerned workers and managers of the different organizations, without whose sincere cooperation, the efforts would have been futile and the conduction of the present research study would have been impossible.

Department of Applied Psychology,
University College of Science & Technology
University of Calcutta
92, Acharya Prafulla Ch. Road
Kolkata-700 009

DURBA PAL

Dated - 9.4.2009