

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I am blessed to be surrounded by many extraordinary people in my life. Without them, it would not have been possible for me finish my endeavor of writing this thesis amidst all challenges. For all who have helped me in the shaping of my ideas and aided me in expressing my ideas through words, I am deeply grateful.

I am deeply indebted to my supervisors, Professor M.H. Qureshi and Dr. Sucharita Sen for their valuable guidance, support and constant encouragement at all stages of my work. Professor Qureshi's calm demeanor and methodical approach was an object lesson to his errant student. I want to express my heartfelt gratitude to Dr. Sucharita Sen, who provided continuous academic and intellectual input to my work and has been my source of constant inspiration to knowledge. I would like to thank other faculty members of the Center for the Study of Regional Development, for giving resourceful suggestions on my work. I would like to specially thank Dr. Seema Bathla for giving me very important suggestion regarding my empirical analysis in the work.

My belief in multidisciplinary analysis was nurtured by exchange of ideas with truly gifted academicians. I owe special thanks to Dr. Aditi Mukherji, Social Scientist, International Water Management Institute, Colombo, Srilanka who has not only deepened my understanding on groundwater sociology but has endlessly answered all my doubts and queries throughout all stages of my work. I express my gratitude to Professor Paramjit Singh Judge of Department of Sociology, Professor Sharanjit Singh Dhillon and Dr. Harban Singh Siddhu of Department of Economics, Guru Nanak Dev University, Amritsar whose ideas and encouragement were critical to the completion of this thesis

I am grateful to Dr. Dhain Kaur, the Head of the Geography Department of Punjab University, Chandigarh for helping me to access the library of Chandigarh University and the library of Economic Department of Punjab University. I am especially grateful to her for all her support and help which facilitated my field visits to Punjab.

I must offer special thanks to Jaspal Singh, Research officer, Economic and Statistical Organization, Punjab, Mr. Sanjeeb Bansal and Mr. Gurdev Singh, Senior Technical Assistant, Ministry of Water Resources and Environment for providing me with easy access to various documents relevant for my work. I am also thankful to the librarian of Central Statistical Organization, Delhi for readily making available the requisite data for my work. I would also like to express my thankfulness to the Jawaharlal Nehru University Library and Documentation unit of Centre for the Study of Regional development in this regard.

Special thanks is due to my dear friend, Ms. Geet Lamba, lecturer, Punjabi University, Patiala, for assisting me with the collection of primary data. She was my companion during my field visits in the villages of Amritsar. I deeply appreciate the companionship and mirth.

I would like to express my acknowledgement to the Dean of Students, Guru Nanak Dev University, Amritsar, Jasmeet and Harpreet, student of the same university for making my stay feasible in Mata Nanki Girls Hostel in the University. Words of thanks should always remain due to Mr. G.S. Gill, Block Development Officer of Ajnala, who facilitated my field visits in Amritsar.

The love and support of my dear students of Miranda House were constant inspiration for me. They had been patient and understanding at many times when I had to reschedule classes to my convenience to facilitate my work. I am extremely grateful to my friends who actively helped me whenever they could with my work. A number of other people directly or indirectly helped me and I am indebted to all of them even if their names have not been mentioned individually in words.

As much as this thesis was a process of intellectual self discovery, it was also one of personal learning. For this privileged urban Indian, spending a span of time in one corner of rural India was profoundly important. I deeply appreciate the warmth and acceptance I received from the villagers who were respondents and participants in the discussions. I am truly grateful to Gurnam Singh who introduced me to Ballab-e-Darya, Shibrum Singh who housed me, Mahinder Singh who fed me and gave me a social base in Tohl Kalan and Bhupinder Singh who warmly welcomed me into their house and into their community in Gharinda. The time I spend with the villagers significantly advanced my understanding in my research but more than that I would always cherish their companionship all my life.

My family has encouraged me from the day one. I am blessed to have the parents that I have, the two wonderful people whose wisdom and kindness have shaped me more than words can express. Thanks to my two little sisters Anumita and Amrita and my dearest sister in law Nimisha for giving me boundless creativity and genuine joy. I find myself absolutely incompetent to put in words my gratitude to my parent in laws and my new family for their patience and understanding and blessings they have brought to my life. And finally and mostly, I must acknowledge my loving and supportive husband Animesh, a true companion who has been a constant source of academic feedback and critical questioning during all stages of my work with great warmth and encouragement.

Anindita Sarkar
Anindita Sarkar