Acknowledgement

The process of shaping a thesis is certainly bracing, however challenging too. It has been a continuous engagement with ideas, assumptions and practical realities. I indeed do not know to what extent I could put in place the thoughts of many who developed the borders of the wisdom, which I am subscribing to in this exploration. What I incorporated or contributed in this work subsumes quite a lot sharing of thoughts with many people.

When I met Prof. Nayar for discussing my M. Phil dissertation in 2002, I was not sure about continuing my studies in Jawaharlal Nehru University for a doctoral degree. I was in a confused state of mind with my unorganised and very raw ideas of research. He patiently listened to my scattered thoughts and helped to align them in a framework. In fact, it is with his unfailing supervision and encouragement that I could continue in the University for Doctoral Research. During the course of this study, I took much of his time in shaping my arguments and putting it in place, even at the last moments of writing. With profound sense of gratitude, I sincerely acknowledge the value of academic freedom that he offers, his readiness in responding to my urgent appeals and the constant support throughout the completion of this study.

My sincere thanks are due to Prof. Padmini Swaminathan for her critical reading and guidance. During the initial months of my M. Phil dissertation, discussions with Dr. Sanghmitra S. Acharya and Prof. Nasir Tyabji introduced me to some of the critical views on work and health. I sincerely acknowledge their valuable help. I extend my gratitude to Prof. Mohan Rao, for his support and Dr. Rajeev Das Gupta and Dr. Sunita Reddy who were members of the progress assessment committee for the extension of my work.

I received enormous support from Centre of Indian Trade Union (CITU) during the course of my field work in Delhi. Dr. K. Hemlata, introduced me to the CITU Delhi State Committee. Comrade Sudeer Kumar and Mohanlal then introduced me to Comrade Rampal, local secretary, Keerti Nagar, who whole heartedly extended his support to meet workers in Mangolpuri. I am very much indebted to Aravind, Meena Kumari and Asish who made all arrangements to meet and talk to workers.

My association with Centre for Education and Communication (CEC) for some period indeed helped me to interact and share views with national and international labour rights organisations working in the garment sector. Furthermore, I also got opportunities to study related sectors like sportswear industry during my association with CEC. I am grateful to my ex-colleagues in CEC, J. John, Manicandan, Ravindranath and Dr. R.S. Tiwari for their encouragements.
My sincere thanks are due to Dr. Rinju Rasaily, who spent a lot of her time for my thesis by reading, rereading and timely intervening to remind me of my shortfalls. Her meticulous corrections and relevant comments could help me avert the mistakes, which I would not have noticed otherwise. I have no words to express my gratefulness for the support and encouragement from her at the critical junctures of my work.

Santhosh and Oommen were of great help in many fronts. Discussions with Santhosh helped me to sharpen my views. I sincerely acknowledge his comments and suggestions. Oommen extended his help at critical moments, which indeed helped to make my life easy.

Abhilash has always been there for all supports. Pramod fulfilled his historic responsibilities of last minute proof reading and page settings. I acknowledge the encouragement and support of Asif, Junais, Annie, Linu, Tito, Shiljo Nabeel, Vinod, Reji, Sreenath, Ragesh, Santhosh chettai, Prasanth and Sanal.

Above all I am obliged a lot to the workers in the garment export units in Mangolpuri. I have no synonyms to acknowledge their cooperation and support without which this study would not have been possible.
