PhD has been an experience of a voyage through varied terrain that has often been disheartening, excruciating and mundane though there have been times of exhilaration and satisfaction. Overall it has been a unique learning saga, where many people have influenced and inspired me in various ways. The most formidable of these influences has been that of Prof. Rajiv K. Saxena. Apart from his exemplary guidance and technical inputs, he has introduced me to the subject of ‘Natural killer cells’ and in a more subtle way to the essence of scientific investigation, the questioning attitude, meticulous designing of experiments (always the elusive control), keen observation and evaluating and justifying them, however intriguing or unconventional, they might seem to be. His encouragement, patience and ability to look beyond mistakes and failures shall always remain as important lessons in my life!

JNU has provided good infrastructure and research facility at the School of Life Sciences for which I thank the dean of this school, Prof. Alok Bhattacharya and former deans, Prof. R.K. Saxena, Prof. K.C. Upadhyaya, Prof. Rajendra Prasad. I would also like to thank the office staff especially Meenu madam, CIF staff, Mr. Alexander, Mr. Khan, Mr. Mishra and Mr. Sharma and the Animal house staff for their help during the course of this work. I also thank Nagarjuna in NII for providing help with the flowcytometer facility. My sincere thanks go out to Thadyos, Naresh, Govinda, Jagdish, Mr. Singh, Bhimsen, Kailash, and Ajit Singh for their laboratory assistance.

A period of around 6 years is a long time that has all flavours and colours and friends! The first mentors in this lab have been my seniors who taught me at times with a scolding and at times with a smile but always with the care that shaped this thesis. Thanks, Niti, Beena, Aparna, Sohita, Vidita, Saubiya and Shamik!
My colleagues and my juniors have provided with many a helping hand and moments of hearty relief at the most sullen moments and sparks of sunshine on gloomy ashen dusks. Thank you, Dr. Lalitha, Tuhina, Sanjay, Sarika, Mithilesh, Deepak, Sudha, Sazia and Kriti!

Friends have been quite as life-savers during this critical operation called PhD and I shall always cherish your reliable piece of advice and round the clock help, Manjistha, your hearty “gaap-shaap” and apt song, Varsha, Sudipta, for your motherly care and Tulika for our freak outs at Rainbows! Thanks to Deepali, Anita, Madhumita, Neerja, Nivedita, Meenakshi, Sagar, Prasanna and Narendra for you have all been there to refill the petrol in my zeal, all this time!

Through and through it all, has been the tireless support of the apostles of strength, an enigmatic species called parents! I don’t dare to thank them for I know I can’t thank them enough for even a single day of their boundless love and care!

In the last lap of this marathon, the toughest my husband Amarnath has run it along too, strengthening my resolve to face yet another day! Thanks Raja!

I firmly believe in the ‘hand of God’ and it is the ‘Divine Destiny’ that has made everything possible! Thank God, one of the thesis of life is over!!
