Acknowledgement

It is very difficult to acknowledge each and every one who has directly and indirectly helped the production of this doctoral thesis. However, the most important help and contribution remain that of my teacher and supervisor Prof. Haladhar Panda. No words are sufficient to acknowledge my indebtedness to him. His keen interest in my work and constant guidance are responsible in shaping this work. His eye for the smallest details has transformed my otherwise ill-formed ideas into a neat presentation of the thesis.

I acknowledge my indebtedness to Dr. Nabhi Ramakrishna Rao, Formerly Reader in English, Government College Phulbani, who first introduced me to the works of J P Donleavy. I was interested in the manner of Donleavy's story-telling in his novels. For my M.Phil. examination, I attempted a study of Donleavy's narrative discourse in The Ginger Man. Later on, I thought it would be proper to extend the study to all his novels. Not only all the novels are examined in this thesis, but also a more comprehensive model is used to analyse the same.

I am much indebted to the Director, ASRC, Hyderabad, who provided me with liberal study grants on more than one occasion to travel to Hyderabad and make use of the library resources there. This work could not have been possible without his help. I also extend my thanks to the University Grants Commission which offered me a minor research grant to conduct my research in the field of fiction theory related to this work.

My special thanks to my friend Dilip Kumar Padhi, who encouraged me to undertake research on the works of Donleavy. He could provide me with some novels of Donleavy, which were not then easily available in India. He has helped me in more than one way. His unstinted effort to get every thing right sitting before the computer for long hours cannot be duly acknowledged with words.

My special thanks are due to my wife, Jayashree, who helped me greatly and kept me free from problems that might have distracted my attention during the prolonged period of my research. My daughters Anisa and Ananya also helped me in their small ways, freeing me from their demands.

I thank all my friends, colleagues, and well-wishers; who kept encouraging me about the work since the day I registered for the degree. I thank all those who helped me directly or indirectly to complete this work in time

Pradeep Kumar Panda.
