ACKNOWLEDGMENT

This thesis is a product of guidance provided by my guides Prof. Dawa T. Norbu & Dr. Ganga Nath Jha, without their support I would not have been able to wind up the thesis. It has been a source of great aspiration to me throughout the work under the guidance of these highly esteemed scholars. Prof. Dawa T. Norbu provided all kinds of help from preparing synopsis to field survey. He cleared all hurdles and confusions during the work regarding my understanding of Tibetan Diaspora. In fact, I am very thankful to my guides for inspiring me to work on such a burning issue. Both the teachers have provided a feeling of teacher-cum-father, therefore, enhanced my intellectual capacity.

Dr. Ganga Nath Jha not only provided theoretical understanding of Tibetan Diaspora but also taught the methodology of knowledge production from university of life. In this context, the contribution of my teachers transcends beyond the thesis.

I would like to thank the staff members of JNU library, Nehru Memorial Museum and Library, Central Secretariat Library, British Council Library, Delhi University Library.

I am no less indebted to Dr. Umesh Kumar, Dr. Rajendra and Dr. Rakhi who helped by providing many chance to interact with Tibetan students of Delhi University. Further, I am thankful to Tibetans of Delhi and Siddis of Karnataka.

My special thanks goes to Atul Gurawa, Ramtoo (Akka), Dimpu Raja and Vishvesh who helped me by providing emotional and moral support throughout the work.

My gratitude goes to Monam Khan who typed my thesis with full cooperation.

I am also indebted to Surendra for his strategic support in completion of this thesis. Last but not the least, my gratitude goes to Prof. Nanduram, Dr. Vivek Kumar, my parents Mr. B.L. Gurawa & Mrs. Sajjan Devi who remained inspiring throughout the work.

Anju Gurawa