I would like to express my heart-felt gratitude to all those without whom I would not have been able to complete this work. First and foremost, I would like to express deepest sense of gratitude to my supervisor Prof. Christopher S. Raj, whose intellectual accomplishment and acumen has been my source of inspiration. Without his valuable guidance, I would not have been able to give my best to my work. A special word of thanks to the teachers of the American Studies division and my fellow students for their valuable suggestions, which provided a useful impetus.

No work is well done without support and encouragement of near and dear ones. I'm grateful to my mother whose constant and never-ending love and support was a pillar of strength. To Bibhu for his constant and unwavering support and help, I owe a lot. A special thanks to my sister Charmaine who too contributed to my effort in no small way. To all my friends, who took active interest in my work and came to my aid whenever I needed their helping hand. Most importantly, my gratitude to Papa, Baby, Sanjeev for the good wishes and support.

My work would have lacked the qualitative depth, if I had not been able to interview key policy makers and experts in the United States. I am indebted to the Fulbright Fellowship and the South Asia Studies, The Paul H. Nitze School of Advanced International Studies (SAIS), Johns Hopkins University, Washington DC for hosting me and facilitating my field study in the United States. To all the policymakers, academics and experts, I interviewed in the United States, Pakistan and India, I remain obliged for sparing your valuable time and enlightening me with your depth of knowledge and experience.

A special word of thanks to the Regional Centre for Strategic Studies (RCSS), Colombo for providing me with the opportunity to visit Pakistan. To the Institute for Conflict Management (ICM), United Service Institution of India (USI) and the Institute for Defence Studies and Analyses (IDSA), New Delhi, for all the help, support and encouragement.
