ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

In the course of nurturing and carrying forward an idea of 'catecholamine', this thesis managed to tide over the various challenges of 'error' which seemed to assume 'catastrophic' proportions at times.

More than any other venture, this exercise in thesis preparation would not have been possible without the constant encouragement and challenges which my supervisor, Prof. N.Z. Baquer provided me rather generously. Her brilliant insights, constructive criticism, scholarly direction and learned opinions are precious assets in my academic career.

I am grateful to the Dean, Prof. M. Habibulla and Ex-Deans, Prof. G.S. Singhal and Prof. P. Mohanty for providing me necessary facilities in the School.

Thanks are due to my friends and colleagues, Raj Kishore, Nehal, Maruti, Banerjee, Deepak, Sudhakar, Tarak, Adrian, Doshi, Varshney, Franklin, Jitendra, Mahanty, Singh, Apurva, Balakrishna, Raghu, Meena, Uday, Natraj, Vijay, Sanjay, Radhakrishna, Murty, Manohara, Shukla, Venugopal, Mahesh, Parveen, Ajay, Surya Prakash, Shehnaz, Anasuya, Niranjan, Neeraj, Noor, Pervez and many others whose togetherness and discussion helped me to brush up some of the cruder elements of my notion.

I would like to record my deepfelt appreciation to Jayasuryan, Manoj, Subhash, Arunan and Paul without whose efforts, 'catecholamine' process would have still remained in the realm of impressions.

I am grateful to Prof. G.P. Talwar, Prof. T.A.V. Subramanian, Prof. A.P. Joshi, Prof. A. Ramaiah, Dr. S.V. Gangal, Dr. N.C.
