ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

I take this opportunity to express my deep sense of reverence, gratitude and indebtedness to my Supervisor, Professor B.D. Chattopadhyaya, for his unstinted support and scholarly guidance. His profound knowledge of the period to the History of India into which the subject of this thesis is situated, was a constant light to clarify all questions and difficulties pertaining to research. He was extremely patient overlooking my initial ignorance in several areas, giving me clear indications how to overcome this handicap.

I was exceptionally fortunate in joining the Centre for Historical Studies of the Jawaharlal Nehru University (JNU) and to have interacted with its scholars: professors and students. All of them gave me of their friendliness and attention and motivated me further to know India, her people and civilization. I am specially obliged to the Faculty of the Centre for Historical Studies, JNU, whose high scholarship was an inspiration. Their advice and counsel strengthened my vocation to devote myself to Indian Studies. In the scholastic atmosphere of the Campus I had a wonderful opportunity to think India, in India and from an Indian perspective. JNU was the right place to understand the eternal spirit of India in the context of a present, full of challenges and hope.
The JNU Library, the Librarian — Mr. V. B. Nanda — and the staff, as well as the Archaeological Survey of India Library, National Museum Library, University of Delhi Library, University of Bombay Library, the Theosophical Society of Madras Library, Bharatiya Vidya Bhawan, Guru Nanak Foundation Library, Vikram University of Ujjain and Kalidasa Centre Library, K. R. Cama Oriental Institute of Bombay Library, Sanskrit Institute Library (Kathmandu), Thanjavur University Library, Jagannatha-Purushottama Temple Library (Puri), Calcutta University Library, Asiatic Society of Bombay and Asiatic Society of Calcutta, were of immense help. My eternal gratitude to the staff of these and many other institutions I visited touring across the Country.

My thanks go to the Archaeological Survey of India (ASI) for the excellent service they render in all parts of India, from the Central Office in New Delhi to places as remote as a small Jaina Cave in Puddukkotai, Tamil Nadu. My field work could be carried out without major difficulties, thanks to the ASI, its facilities, good conservation of sites and monuments, information and documentation, staff and guest houses.

The unfailing financial support of "Oficina de Planificacion Nacional (ODEFLAN)" was the material base of this project. I am grateful to them and specially to Mrs. Margarita Lewald, Executive Secretary of the Programme of Special Scholarships. I am also indebted to the Government of India and its Department of Scholarships for Foreigners, administered by the Ministry of Human Resource Development. Thanks to their initial support I came and started my work in India, achieving after some time concrete results which enabled me to obtain support from the Government of Chile.

I am thankful to my Chilean University: Universidad Metropolitana de Ciencias de la Educacion, and its authorities as well as my colleagues for giving me permission to stay in India for four years devoting myself to Indian Studies. I am obliged to that 'Claustro'.

Professor Héctor Herrera Cajas initiated me in Historical Studies about seventeen years ago. He has always been a model of devotion to the study of History under the light of the Transcendental value which makes man son of God. I pay him my homage including in it my College professors of the "Instituto de Historia" belonging to the Universidad Católica de Valparaíso.

I am extremely thankful to the Embassy of Chile, New Delhi. Ambassador Marcelo Padilla Minvielle, and the present Ambassador Dr.Eduardo Ortiz, together with other Chilean diplomats, were true friends. My thanks are due to Mr.Alfredo García, Martín Donoso, Héctor Cifuentes, Francisco del Campo, Pedro Barros and Mrs.Angelina Leiva. Also my sincere thanks to the members of the staff: Mr.Mani, Michael D'Souza, Birman and Rakesh.
Besides, I must express my thanks to JNU authorities and in particular to the Rector, Professor Susnigdha Dey, who also became a personal friend.

I express my gratitude to many other friends I made during my long stay in India, who made me feel at home, curing all homesickness and teaching real lessons in Indian hospitality. The lovely family of Professor Romano Borges and Carlos Lozano and his family from Colombia symbolize all of them.

I thank my friend Arthur Monteiro for his constructive criticism of my draft, Mr. K.K. Jain who typed the several drafts of this thesis and Mr. Arun Kumar Nath, who typed diligently the final version.

Finally, I give my thanks to my beloved life partner, Emelina. Her abnegation and constant support from across the world enabled me to overcome all difficulties and gave the impetus to achieve my goals. She and our daughter, Rosario de los Angeles, with love and understanding, accepted the challenge that this research meant, the two years of separation (1986-87; 1989-90) and the two years of residence in Delhi (1987-89).

And when all thanks would have been expressed to everybody, I am still in debt. That is why I offer this humble work as a token of my surrender to the Supreme Being, and to all Gurus who represent the living Master on this earth. One of such exceptional men I providentially met in Delhi in the year 1989, the late Sant Darshan Singh Maharaj. To him my salute and my devotion, for nothing is achieved without the grace of God and the blessings of the Masters.
