Appendix

Photographs

Photograph-1
1.2 Impact of Unemployment
1.2. Selling items on the street
Once a food exporter, Nigeria must now import tons of food daily to feed its people. The huge resulting debt focuses the country’s economy on its cash exports of petroleum and gas. This leaves few jobs for ordinary people who turn to selling items on the streets. (Source: Douglas A. Phillips, (2004), "Nigeria", (Philadelphia: Chelsea House Publisher))
Workers on an oil rig off the shore of Nigeria help produce the “black gold” that has become the salvation of the impoverished nation. (Source: Douglas A, .Phillips, (2004), "Nigeria", (Philadelphia: Chelsea House Publisher))
Photograph-3
3.1. Transformation of Nigerian Economy
3.2. Impact on Unemployment, Crime and Corruption

Nigeria's economy has been transformed over the centuries from a traditional agrarian and trans-Saharan trading society to one solely based on oil production and manufacturing. The resulting 30 percent unemployment rate contributes to the widespread crime and corruption.