ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The study of Robert Frost has been in conception ever since I did my masters in English Literature and studied Robert Frost in my study of American Literature. This gained momentum years later when I decided to pursue my doctorate. I am pleased and grateful to acknowledge my indebtedness in knowledge and understanding of Frost as a man, poet, father, spouse, friend, and above all the philosopher.

The most significant source is of course Robert Frost himself. The fond intimacy shared with him these past two years is going to be a memorable experience that will always be treasured.

My sincere thanks to the Vice Chancellor, IIS University, Dr. Ashok Gupta on grooming me all through the years as a true mentor, keeping a vigilant eye and monitoring my work silently. It is under his aegis that I regained my confidence. I also thank him on initiating the Computer Training Programme for the teachers and making the entire IIS faculty Computer savvy. It was here that I learnt computers, and it is because of this that today I have typed the thesis myself. Thanks to him on making me self-dependent and instilling in me the courage to complete my thesis well on time.

I owe my sincere thanks to the IIS University and its faculty members on taking me on a three year educational trip, one year for course work and two for writing my thesis. I also owe my sincere gratitude to Dr. N.K. Jain, the Dean, IIS University for guiding me all through this journey. It was he who laid his trust in me, made me realise he would always be there to guide me. I acknowledge my indebtedness to the Rector and Registrar Dr. Raakhie Gupta for all her cooperation during these three years, Dr. Rimika Singhvi and the faculty at IIS University for their valuable inputs, advice and lectures. It was under the canopy of this intellectual constellation that I groomed myself these three years, and what is most amazing, every time I read I realised how ignorant I was, how much more I needed to know. A wide world of knowledge of human relationships was before me; there was so much for me to explore. Initially, I was lost. It was an arduous task which I had to accomplish. As I read, I started enjoying Frost’s poetry. The more I read, the closer I felt to him.

My heartfelt gratitude to Prof. J.N. Sharma, my Supervisor, who made it happen. He has been my inspiration and my chief motivation. He made me see this dream come true. Every time I visited him he gave a boost to my energy by appreciating the effort that I put in, encouraging me to believe that I had the potential in me to complete this research successfully. I do not know whether I have done him justice, but there is one thing for which I can vouch: I have not come across a mentor like him. After knowing him I realised that knowledge is not the only thing required in life. Confidence and the will to do something is what is needed if one needs to pursue one’s goals. He gave me the confidence to stay the course and in spite of my work falling short many a time he was patient, checked and monitored my work and made me well aware on the first day itself that a complacent attitude would not be acceptable. Talking about him, I also owe my deep gratitude to the soul of Mrs. Sharma, who always had a smile on her face and made me feel welcome whenever I needed help.
I am pleased to acknowledge my gratitude to Dr. Malti Mathur, who gave me my first lessons on Frost, after I decided to write my thesis on him. She showed faith in me and gave me the confidence that I could do it. She also gave me her contact number with full liberty to ask her for any help without hesitancy. Of course, I did not trouble her, but I thank her for the liberty and all the advice and suggestions that she gave me.

My earnest gratitude to Prof. Sudha Rai, former H.O.D, Department of English, University of Rajasthan for the valuable advice and suggestions she gave me during my presentation. It was only after following her suggestions that I was able to complete my last chapter, “Philosophy of Human Relationships”. She helped me sort out my thoughts; otherwise, rewriting the chapter seemed a herculean task. I must also express my gratitude to Ms. Mala Agnihotri, Sr. Vice Principal, IIS for her immense support to me.

Nearer home, I must especially acknowledge sincere gratitude to my husband, who has been my armour, shielding me from any and every obstacle that came my way. He helped me pursue my studies, from the undergraduate level right through my present work. Had it not been his support, I could never have ventured on this journey. He gave me courage and has always been there to stop my retreating steps. Many a time when I felt low, almost lost, found it difficult to cope up, his hand was always stretched to hold me. Organising my membership of the American Library, being with me in every endeavour that I undertake, motivating and guiding me and, above all, making me confident that he is always there for me, loving me and always being by my side when I need him. He is a very strong pillar of my life; I consider myself blessed and the favoured child of God.
I must also thank my daughter Neha and my son Jai, who have been my strength, for believing in me, bearing with me through my ups and downs, forgiving me for my neglect of them for these three years, and helping me with my knowledge of computers. There have been times when I felt stranded because of some technical problem, but these two technicians were by my side. They encouraged, proof-read my work, and gave their suggestions. The title of my fifth chapter is my son Jai’s suggestion. My children wanted me to type my own thesis: they said I could do it and so I did it.

I am grateful to my parents for nurturing me and making me capable of undertaking research in the field of literature. Though they are no longer alive, I know their blessings are always with me. Above all, I thank the Almighty, who has blessed me with the inspiration and strength to pursue my dreams.
