ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I am deeply indebted to Dr. A. Appadurai, the Founder-Director of the India School of International Studies (now merged in the Jawaharlal Nehru University), for giving me the opportunity to take up research work for Ph.D. degree on 1 October 1955 in the first batch of research students in that School. I am equally grateful to Dr. Abdul Aleem, ex-Vice Chancellor of Aligarh Muslim University, who at that time served as the Honorary Professor of West Asian Studies at the School for suggesting this topic to me for research.

The main hurdle in my progress was accessibility of the primary sources. The Ministry of External Affairs, Government of India, New Delhi came to my rescue and encoded to my request to consult the records for the period, 1919 to 1939, at the National Archives of India, New Delhi. At that time, this period had not yet been thrown open for research and the manuscript notes which I took from the archival records had, therefore, to be scrutinized by the Historical Division of the Ministry of External Affairs before release to me for use. This took considerable time.
I am also grateful to late Dr. Tara Chand who helped me in the initial stages of my work. The main job of giving shape to the material was completed from the time Dr. U. S. Agwani took over the supervision of my work. He patiently went through my drafts and gave extremely valuable suggestions. I am extremely grateful to him for the kindness, patience and consideration, which he always showed to me.

Initially, I worked at the Library of the Indian Council of World Affairs, 33 New Delhi, where the library staff always went of the way to help me. My main job was completed in the Research Room, National Archives of India. The Director of the Archives and his staff helped me and took great pains to solve my problems. I take this opportunity to thank them for their kindness and co-operation. It would have been impossible for me to complete the work without their help and co-operation.

In conclusion, I wish to thank my friends and relatives who took keen interest in my work and encouraged me to complete it.
