ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

In preparing this work, I have benefitted immensely from Professor Ashok Guha, my supervisor and also my teacher, from whom I began to learn economics as a subject. While his penetrating insights and invaluable comments contributed greatly to my understanding of many issues in the pure theory of international trade, his patient and affectionate attitude has always been an encouragement. I cannot adequately express my indebtedness to him. My deep gratitude is due to Dr. S.K. Das who introduced me to some recent developments in the theory of international trade. His valuable suggestions helped me clarify many doubts.

Over the years, I have accumulated many debts to my friends Mulda, Binod, Geeta, Munirul, Pinaki, Uttem, Vandana and Vathsala. Vandana took all the pains to read the manuscript and suggest some improvements, and Mallah helped me in drawing the diagrams (rather strange ones to him!) I am so greatly overwhelmed by the precious and priceless sympathies they have shown to me that I find no words to express it.

I also take this opportunity to acknowledge my gratefulness to the Reserve Bank of India for its grant of a research fellowship without which this study would not have been complete.

Alokesh Barua

New Delhi, June 17, 1979.