ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This dissertation is again an opportunity to acknowledge the several debts I have accumulated over the years in my professional and personal journey.

My sincere gratitude to my supervisor, Dr. V.B. Mathur, Director, Wildlife Institute of India, who despite his very busy schedule helped and guided me on every step of this journey. His enthusiasm for this work was my biggest driving force.

Dr. S.P. Goyal, Scientist Emeritus of the Wildlife Forensics Department of WII and a dear friend encouraged me to take up such a study almost fifteen years ago. Thank you for your belief in me. Esteemed colleagues Dr. P.K. Malik, Dr. G.S. Rawat, Dr. V.P. Uniyal, Dr. Parag Nigam, Dr. Asha Rajvanshi, Qamar Qureshi and Dr. Satyakumar of the Wildlife Institute of India have always provided valuable encouragement and support along the way.

My time spent on secondment from the Government with WWF and the TRAFFIC network (2006-2011) will always form a very special part of my professional and personal journey. Many of these erstwhile colleagues are now friends for life, sharing the same fierce passion for wildlife conservation. My sincere gratitude to Ravi Singh, Steven Broad, Roland Melisch, James Compton, Sabri Zain, Pauline Verheij, Sejal Worah, Khalid Pasha and all other colleagues from the TRAFFIC and WWF network for their support. Chris Shepherd of TRAFFIC South East Asia very generously shared his doctoral dissertation, which helped me define parameters of my own work. Richard Thomas has been very generous in pulling out records from TRAFFIC database for me, often at short notice. I also thank him for permitting use of various TRAFFIC publications.

I was privileged to receive a Fulbright-Nehru Environmental Leadership fellowship in 2013, which further provided impetus to this dissertation. I am grateful to the United States-India Educational Foundation (USIEF) and its partners for this opportunity.

In the USA, Dr. Tara Teel, Dr. Don Carlos Andrew and Prof. Michael Manfredo of the Department of Human Dimensions of Natural Resources, Warner College of Natural Resources, Colorado State University at Fort Collins very kindly facilitated my visit and made it extremely rewarding for me. Professor Barry Noon of the Department of Fish, Wildlife, and Conservation Biology, Colorado State University took keen interest in my work and happily shared his vast knowledge and passion for conservation. To each of them, I offer my deepest gratitude.

Mr. P.K. Sen, former Director, Project Tiger, Dr. Ashok Singh, former Chief Wildlife Warden, Uttar Pradesh, Dr. Rajesh Gopal, former Member Secretary, National Tiger Conservation Authority, Mr Brijendra Singh Hon. Wildlife Warden, Corbett Tiger Reserve, Late Sri A.S. Negi, former Chief Wildlife Warden, Uttarakhand, Sri Vinod Rishi former ADG, Wildlife, Govt. of India, Dr. A.J.T. Johnsingh, former Dean, Wildlife Institute of India and Sri V.B. Sawarkar, former Director, Wildlife Institute of India are some of the stalwarts in conservation with whom I have been privileged to share a close and much valued association over several years. I offer my sincere gratitude towards them.

Mr. D.V.S. Khati PCCF (Wildlife) & Chief Wildlife Warden, Uttarakhand has been a mentor at every step of my journey for well over two decades now. His sagacious advice and calming influence have guided me out of choppy waters on more occasions than I can remember. I also owe a special debt to Dr. Dhananjai Mohan for his support. I also thank my colleagues across various levels in the Uttarakhand Forest Department, with whom I have shared many valuable experiences and traversed long distances across the mountains and valleys of this beautiful state.

Hon. Justice Madan Lokur of the Supreme Court of India has been a constant source of inspiration and encouragement in my continuing journey as a student of environmental jurisprudence. I have also greatly benefitted from my association with A.D.N.Rao, Ritwick Dutta and Moulika Arabhi who are amongst the finest lawyers working on conservation issues in India today, in shaping my understanding of this subject.

Mr. S. Ramaswamy, Chief Secretary Uttarakhand has always encouraged and supported my endeavors in this field. His enthusiasm and support for wildlife conservation is gratefully acknowledged.

I have authored one chapter (Chapter 14) and co-authored another with William H. Schaedla (Chapter 18) in the Handbook of Transnational Environmental Crime, edited by Lorraine Elliott and William H. Schaedla, published by Edward Elgar Publishing, Cheltenham, UK and Northampton, MA, USA in 2016. The guidance provided by the editors, Lorraine Elliott and William H. Schaedla is gratefully acknowledged. Both these chapters are appended as Annexures with kind permission of the publishers.

My gratitude to Subodh Mittal, lifelong friend who plays the role of anchor for me effortlessly and every time. Dear Kanv, now one of the brightest stars in our skies is remembered fondly for his warmth and love.

In the USA, Travis Schmidt, Sarah Paige Ryan, lovely Wynona and adorable Augustus, who happily welcomed me into their home at Fort Collins and have become family.

Sri Upendra Arora of Natraj Publishers, Dehradun is one whose passion for books I hugely admire and share.

My eternal respect and gratitude towards my parents, Mr Rajendra Prasad & Dr. Maya Prasad, whose values and blessings continue to inspire, guide and shape our lives.

My wife Anjali has been the wind beneath my wings, silently managing a million things big and small, all by her as life went by while I was mostly far away in a forest, fighting other battles. No words can be enough to express my gratitude for her.

Our children Kislaya, now a fine young man and Kopal, a fine young woman are taking their first steps into the outside world. This is again, for you so that you may inherit a better world and continue to enjoy and cherish nature as you have been blessed to experience from your childhood.

And finally, to my sister Dr. Amita Bagchi and brother-in-law, Krishna Kumar Bagchi, a special word of gratitude for their support and being incredibly strong and standing tall against tough times always.

I am incredibly blessed to have you all in my life.
NOTE FOR REVIEWERS AND READERS

This study makes liberal use of a large number of documents including statutes of International Conventions, records of proceedings of various meetings of national and international bodies, national laws, court orders including that of the International Court of Justice, Hon’ble Supreme Court of India and the American Supreme Court. While many relevant parts of such documents are quoted in toto with specific citation in this study, this work does not claim to be a complete or verbatim record of such documents. Wherever considered necessary, some portions have been edited, rephrased, or emphasis added for purposes of amplification, elucidation, interpretation and analysis to meet the objectives of this study. As such, for a complete record of such proceedings, court orders etc., kindly refer to the original documents as listed in the references.
