Life is a journey where we are faced with the unknown every single day and are expected to navigate through these tempestuous ivy. And pursuing a PhD is a singular lifecycle in itself! I had the fortune of engaging in the same, for which I cannot but feel obliged and humbled forever. My journey was enriched by the presence of some remarkable people in it. Thank you is a small but powerful word and although it does not quite feel like it expresses the extent of gratitude I feel for them, nevertheless I will endeavour to do so.

The first and foremost is my guide Professor Archana Dassi, who was not just a guide for me but an emotional anchor who motivated and inspired me every minute of the way. Words fall short to express the intensity of gratitude, love and respect I feel for her. Her continuous support during my personal lows have given me that needed push and the ray of hope that this too shall pass. My sense of gratitude knows no bounds for the period during my mother’s recurrent health issues that had completely consumed me for a long period and was overcome only because of her. Ma’am you’re my rock of Gibraltar and I thank you for being there for me from the bottom of my heart!

My next person I wish to thank is my mother who brought me to this world and encouraged me to be a free woman and do what my heart wanted to and not what the society dictated. Pursuing Masters in Social Work as against some conventionally woman-like subject was one of them. Losing my father in my childhood has always affected me inwardly but my mother’s encouragement and that of my elder sibling’s has kept me afloat. My journey into PhD would not have happened at all if not for my brother’s insistence and constant nagging to utilise the NET-JRF award during those long-distance calls he would make, which I finally did enrol for almost at the end of the two year time-period. Thank you Chotda. Pinkey, Dagil, Borda, Sameer Bhaiya and Bou thank you for being there for me always. The bunch of nephews and nieces, and the grand-daughter are duly thanked for adding the much needed comic relief in my life. Bhabhi, thank you for being you, your understanding and patient nature is something I wish I could practice.

Tarun thank you bro, your constant support during all this time and those cups of coffees really did help us both. Sanchayan your ready help in sending me those pdf articles that were not accessible here has been an enormous help and heartfelt thanks is extended to you. Thanks to all my friends and well-wishers for being a part of my life.

The women I interviewed and discussed their lives and with whom I spent half a year in those villages are extended heartfelt gratitude. This work would not have been possible without your unhesitant, carefree and honest sharing about your life with a total stranger like me. Your constant battles that you take in your stride with a smile while navigating through the hardships in your life is awe-inspiring. I salute your courage. Beheno shat shat naman!
