I feel compelled to acknowledge - and I do this with utmost sincerity - the help in writing of this work from my erudite supervisor Dr. J.S. Gandhi. This work would not have been possible without his constant care and scholarly guidance. In fact, it was because of his insight and help that the topic was conceived and formulated for an in-depth empirical sociological study for my doctoral work.

I also offer my sincerest thanks to the Chairman of the Centre, Prof. K.L. Sharma for his cooperation and help in this work.

To Prof. Baldev R. Sharma, Executive Director, Shri Ram Centre for Industrial Relations and Human Resources, New Delhi, I owe special thanks.

I must express my sincere thanks and regards to Prof. Yogendra Singh, Prof. R.K. Jain, Prof. Dipankar Gupta, Prof. Panini, Dr. E. Haq, Dr. Anand Kumar for the sociological insight and knowledge I gained during the last five years of my study in the Centre.
My thanks are due to Pradeep, Rana, Ravinder, Harsh, Gopal, Rajinder, Guriya, Nina, Jyoti Sundersan, and other friends for their small acts of friendship during my stay here.

Words are indeed inadequate to thank my parents, brothers and sisters who have always been a source of inspiration to me.

I am obliged to the University Grant Commission (UGC) for awarding me research fellowship which made it possible to undertake this study.

I am thankful to my friends Mr. P.S. Rajagopal and Mr. Bhupal Singh Bisht for wordprocessing this work despite their very busy schedule.
